England's Third Line of Defense

By G. Kay Spencer

The singular metamorphosis that transmutes a quiet, meek little London tailor or clerk to a brawny, element-hardened lusk, who meets the steel of Spartan-trained armies in the supreme test—and conquers—is one of the inexplicable developments of this war.

While Flanders sucks the life blood of the noblest armies of them all, London listens—and hears the thunder of British guns "out there." Those deep-throated mammoths are the "Gods of Attrition" and the first line of England's defense.

The second line of defense rides the waters of the world. No engine flies so high nor so far as the "Blond Jack."

There is another line. The women of the United Kingdom man the forges and foundries of Britain from Kirkwall to Dover. They insure the delivery of the sinews of war to the heroic descendants of that "thin red line," who fought as Englishmen have always fought—with honor and glory—on the sands of the Sahara, the crests of the Alps or the Tibetan plateaus.

The women have also entered the military. The Women's Military Reserve, organized by Viscountess Castlerough (now marchioness of Londonderry), whose object is to defend the shores of the nation against the possible invasion of the Germans, is about to acquire the honor of becoming an integral part of the British army system.

To the marvelous organizing ability of the marchioness of Londonderry is due this unique woman's organization. With her second in command, Hon. Evelina Haverfield, the marchioness has developed the W. V. R. until they are much more efficient than the so-called "Territorials" were when the great war struck. They are proficient in the regular army drill manual. All the officers have attained their positions solely on merit.

They have had the aid of regular army officers, but these gradually withdrew as the women developed officers of their own. A tremendous impetus was given the youthful organization when, through the death of her father-in-law, Lady Castlerough became marchioness of Londonderry. Society flocked to her colors, only to find that commissions could not be bought—and then, curiously enough, they set out to work for them. There is many a prominent society woman serving in the ranks with servants of her own establishment.

The marchioness received the official attention of Lord Kitchener, when he recommended her as the colonel in chief for the very good and sufficient reason that he desired the command to go to a leader willing to accept the guidance of the government. Mrs. Pankhurst is said to have been more or less disappointed at this turn, but she lost no time in grieving—instead, she loyally supported the legion of Amblesome.

The age limit for the organization was fixed at eighteen to forty. The big drill hall of Knightsbridge was loaned and drilling in the military arts has continued ever since.

It might be mentioned that all the officers of the W. V. R. have passed successfully the royal army examinations for their rank.

The purpose in applying an official status to the W. V. R. would be for the effect in case of an actual invasion any time in this or future wars—for it is to be a permanent organization. If they were no official body an enemy would be justified in dealing with them as franc-tireurs or snipers. An official standing merely allows to them treatment under the war colors for official armed enemy forces.

While there seems to be not the remotest fear of invasion, either now or in the years to come, it is felt that in case of any internal disruption occurring through malignant internal forces or enemy air raids, a body of healthy, straight-thinking, well-officered and trained women would be of inestimable aid.

The colonel in chief of the W. V. R. never identified herself with the militant suffragettes, but her chief aid, Mrs. Haverfield, was a leader among them, driving her dog-cart through the London streets bearing flaming placards, "Votes for women!" and having—with evident enjoyment—numerous fights with the police and the rabble.

walk on toes; heels not touching floor, and toes turned in. When sitting, cross the legs, the foot always resting on the outer sides. The wearing of broad toe shoes with the metal "arch supporter" absolutely abandoned, also is advocated.

Sour Stomach.

Eat slowly, masticate your food thoroughly, abstain from meat for a few days and in most cases the sour stomach will disappear. If it does not, take one of Chamberlain's Tablets immediately after supper. Red meats are most likely to cause sour stomach and you may find it best to cut them out.—Adv.

"Central" Appreciates Your Kindness

There are three operators concerned in every telephone call—you, the party you are talking to and "central."

All three parties must co-operate if the best service is to be had.

The telephone operators are human, just as you are.

Being human, they appreciate kindness and courtesy, but resent unkindness and discourtesy just as any of us do.

Kindness begets kindness, courtesy creates courtesy and patience encourages patience.

If you wish to get the best out of your telephone, make it a point to be kind and courteous to the operators.
