FRENCH PAY TRIBUTE TO FIRST WOUNDED SAMMY

LEUTENANT HARDEN, ABOVE, FRENCH MONUMENT HONORING HARDEN.

The French government has erected a monument in honor of Lieutenant D Vere H. Harden, Co. C, signal corps, second field battalion, the first American wounded in battle in France. The monument which commemorates Lieutenant Harden for bravery in action was erected at the door of the dugout he occupied the day he was wounded. Ben Boyce of Indianapolis, son of W. D. Boyce, owner of the Boyce newspaper, was with Harden at the time he was wounded. In a letter to his father Boyce says in part: "Lieutenant Harden has been in the army 14 years, including five years in foreign service, with trips to Alaska and Panama as a wireless operator. He is a fine-looking, clean-cut, clean-living man, who surely deserves promotion when you think of the way we are commissioning new men with little experience as captains, etc., at home. It surely would be no more than right to give men like Lieutenant Harden, with the education, active service, experience and other qualifications a promotion. It would encourage the men here. Lieutenant Harden is 35 years old and married. Mrs. Harden is living with her parents at Burlington, Vt., during the war."

In the trenches the boys compare the merits of their mothers. It is a wonderful thing, that spirit of mother love which surrounds us, blesses us and leads us to higher things. We gather together in the trench and we talk of mother—mother—mother. The lad whose mother cried and fainted when he left quietly drops out. He never shows his letters from home because it is possible she writes him laments and moanings. But those of us who have a home courage of which we talk—how we boast! Mother is a mighty factor in the winning of this war.

Little isolated spots among the men holes, grimly determined to bang on to the end.

The German masses had already moved across No Man's Land into the battered earthworks that once formed the British firing line. Other masses were moving up in support, and already the nearest shell holes were heaving and boiling over with restless heads and shoulders of men about to renew the advance. The barrage of the British guns was heavy, but at close quarters only infantry can stop the progress of infantry, and the fire from the British shell holes had grown weak and straggling. It looked as if the scanty British lines would be overwhelmed by sheer weight of numbers.

Air Alive With Bullets.

The fire from the Germans increased until the air was alive with their bullets. It was the concentrated fire which always precedes the rush to close quarters. The blue-gray figures were already beginning to appear above the shell holes, their loose flapping uniforms and hideous gas masks giving them the appearance of demons, when suddenly into the smoke and muck of battle there dived a British airplane.

Fifty feet from the ground it flattened out and skidded along the line, dropping its bombs among the bewildered Germans. Whirling swiftly at the front of the attack, it came skimming back like a swallow charging a swarm of flies, its machine guns enfilading the advancing foe and driving him back to his burrows.

A storm of German bullets swept through the planes, and a black flame-centered burst of enemy shrapnel shattered the airplane in vapor. The watching infantry saw splinters fall

HOME GUARD CALLED OUT LAST NIGHT

In the way of colds. Men not called last night will be first out if another fall is needed.

Fortunately for the city, nothing developed, but the home guards were ready for any exigency, and the splendid spirit of the men in obeying their officers explicitly and without reason being known to them, elicited warm commendation from the sheriff, major and company officers and staff this morning. In some instances the men were so soldierly that they didn't inquire about the purpose of it all until relieved this morning. They obeyed their orders without stopping to question why they had been unceremoniously routed out of comfy beds at the midnight hour.

So perfectly did the guard's system of transportation, assembly and supply feature work out that there wasn't a hitch anywhere, and the night's affair has conclusively proven that the organization is well drilled, well organized, and, moreover, willing to meet any contingency with perfect control of men by officers.

In spite of the tenacious of the occasion and the suffering of the men in the cold, no whimper came from any one.

Every phase of posting guards, of challenging, and conducting a military protection was followed out very minutely and the men behaved like veterans.

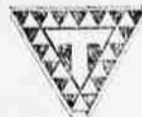

The vigilance didn't abate until Old Sol came peeping over the snow-capped prominences in the east to cast his warming rays of golden sunlight upon a peaceful community that had passed a night—the nature of which was what? Perchance no more pregnant with danger to the citizenry than any other night, and, then again, perchance it was.

Military maneuvers and things military generally are not familiar to Sheriff Warnick, but he rapidly assumed the art of receiving military salutes as he accompanied officers about the guard lines during the night and went home at dawn today aching to take up the manual of arms and other prerequisites of military life. He freely confessed that he likes the game, after having spent a night flitting hither and yon with the commanding officer.

The Home Guard was relieved of guard duty at the O-W. machine shops through the fact that Superintendent Bollons was able to divert the night crew from the shops into guardmen instantly. The yards, shops and property generally were guarded carefully until daylight by company men.

AVIATOR CHECKED GENERAL ADVANCE

Rained Missiles on Enemy Infantry at Cambrai.

USES RELAY OF MACHINES

As Soon as One Was Crippled British Airman Would Nurse It Home and Bring Out Another—Swoops Down on Germans Many Times, Crumpling Up Every Attempted Attack With His Machine Gun Fire.

A startling story of how one daring British aviator, like a cowboy and a general, held up for a whole day repeated enemy attacks upon a weak and crumbling British line at Cambrai in the heart of the desperate struggle there by using four airplanes, one after another, as they were torn and crippled by enemy fire, has just come to light. It shows that some of the most daring and dangerous airplane work of the last year has been in the new field of attacking enemy infantry from the air.

The Germans were trying to recover a portion of the lost Hlobenburg line, pushing with a great weight of men and guns at a point where it was very difficult for the British to bring up reserves. The British battalion opposing the attack had come to earth in from its quivering frame and the silvery fabric of the undersuits was torn in several places by shell splinters. But the daring pilot finished his course and vanished into the smoke clouds, leaving the panic-stricken enemy clinging to his shell holes too shaken and thinned to press the attack further.

Little by little, however, the German supports came up, advancing by short rushes over the open, re-enforcing their comrades in twos and threes. In spite of British fire, scores and scores of their dead littered No Man's Land, but gradually the strength of the attacking line was made good, and the shell holes again began to heave and boil, as men rose from the lower cover and laid hold of the reins to assist them over the top.

Outweighed the British.

Then, suddenly, they were over and away, little spurts of humanity belched out of the crater field, cascading into a seething blue-gray, rushing mass, hopelessly outweighing the handful of British defenders. But before the mass could gain full momentum, a familiar snorting hum sounded above the din of battle, and out of the low-lying haze swept the covering airplane, a new machine, but with the same pilot as before. Its bombs dropping among the advancing Germans, dispersing those who escaped the flying fragments, and his machine guns swept them out of sight into the shell holes.

A half hour passed, and again the enemy attempted to attack, this time hesitatingly and with diminished spirit. Again the airplane appeared, and the first rattle of his guns sent the Germans into cover again. A German airplane dashed down to drive him away, but another British machine from the protecting patrol came down on the German's tail and sent him careering behind his own lines. There were other German machines in the offing, but the watchful British fighters made the enemy airmen shy of losing their altitude, and the dashing British pilot kept his guard over the threatened line without further interference.

Many times he swept down on the Germans that day, crumpling up every attempted attack with his fire, rendering portions of their positions untenable with his bombs often rocking madly in the air gusts from a barrage salvo, just as often performing wider maneuvers to confuse the gunners and riflemen who searched for him incessantly. Three times his airplane was so badly damaged that he had to curse its falling strength back to his airplane. But each time he returned in a new machine, encouraging the British infantry by his example, and scattering death and confusion among their foes. He was lying his fourth machine when darkness settled down, putting an end to the conflict, with the Germans securely checked.
