FLYING MACHINES COMMON

Even Texas Chickens Are Becoming Accustomed to Aviators.

DALLAS, Texas, March 12.—No longer is it necessary for people to journey to some fair or carnival to see birdmen perform "stunts." With the coming of thousands of aviators to the several training camps for army flyers, airplanes have become very commonplace in Texas.

A half dozen big machines hovering over a Texas town no longer attract attention. Texans have come to regard the army flyers with their dives, loops, nose spins, and similar feats as very ordinary. In the rural districts the frequent cross country flights from Dallas to Fort Worth, Wichita Falls, Waco, Houston and San Antonio, no longer send the barnyard flock hurrying to cover. Even the chickens have come to look upon the aviators and their big machines as everyday visitors.

Several machines were badly damaged by the curious crowds last fall when the advance guard of aviators began to make cross country flights. Today aviators alight at will and, aside from possibly a few passer-by or playing children, attract little, if any, attention.

Every aviation field has its official tester. This tester is the individual who makes the first flight with every new machine. Once he climbs into the air with a new machine he begins a series of "stunts" calculated to try out the planes that are to be used by the flying cadets. First he will make a dozen loops, then a nose spin, coming out to do a sudden dive, then a wide loop and finish with a turn on the wing.

"These tests," remarked a tester, a lieutenant at one of the fields near Dallas, "put an extraordinary strain upon every part of the machine. If it comes out all right, I put my O. K. on it and it's ready for use. If it doesn't—they will soon get another tester and instructor."

Every day dozens of huge shipping crates are hauled to the Texas aviation fields. Every field has its assembling plant where expert mechanics carefully operate the many parts and in a few days a new airplane is rolled into the field. Every inch of the Irish linen covered wings is gone over for any defects. Wires and connecting rods are jerked and submitted to a heavy weight. The steering mechanism is examined, the motor started and trained ears listen to its hum. If this preliminary test shows everything to be ship-shape, the long brown craft with the red, white and blue stripes on the rudder, is trundled further into the field, the tester mounts the seat, fastens the several straps that hold him in, and sails away.

Loops, dives, nose and tail spinning are just ordinary flying for the tester. The machine stands on end, on its nose, flies on the side, turns over and keeps on flying, executes spirals and glides, flies upside down—in fact does everything but "sit up and beg."

The big tests on all parts of the machine comes when a "turn on the wing" is executed, when the machine is suddenly tilted to one side or the other and if there is anything faulty with the machine it comes to light. Both hands, both feet, and the whole head is needed in "stunt" flying and the failure of anyone of these to act properly may mean the end of the "stunt" and the flyer as well.

To execute a nose and tail spin, several thousand feet up, the motor is idled and the machine is "out of control" of the aviator. To right the machine he must speed up his engine and use both hands and feet in setting his planes and steering gear. Skill and coolheadedness are required to regain control of the machine. Confidence is another thing required to make a successful flyer. "It can be cultivated," said the lieutenant tester.

Machines from the Texas fields take to the air daily in face of winds blowing thirty-five and forty miles an hour. Few of the accidents which have occurred were due to windy conditions, instructors claim. Aviators refrain from flying over Texas towns where there are particularly tall buildings.

You may want a box of very nice writing paper, something that is better than the ordinary. You will be able to find just what you want at Silverthorn's Family Drug Store. 3-11-17.
