SHERRY'S

William Duncan and Carol Holloway, whose amazing tests of daring made "The Fighting Trail" far and away the greatest serial ever screened, outfit all previous records in "Vengeance and the Woman," Greater Vitagraph's new melodrama serial, the eighth episode of which will be seen in the Sherry Theater today. Mr. Duncan directed the serial and takes the leading male role of Henry Blake, railway builder and capitalist whose life is sought by Black Jack, outlaw leader, whom he sent to prison for fifteen years. Miss Holloway is Beadie Blake, his young wife, who shares every peril of her husband and also is constantly sought as a hostage by the outlaw gang.

"Vengeance and the Woman," is an outdoor picture, more than ninety per cent. of the scenes being filmed in wild recesses in the Sierras in Southern California, under the personal supervision of Mr. Duncan. In the cast are three of the best riders and rifle shots in that country, all old favorites in "The Fighting Trail," George Holt, Fred Burns and Vincente Howard, whose fearless stunts add realism to every one of the fifteen smashing episodes. In the eighth episode, the Blakes, fleeing from the bandits, take refuge in an unused mine tunnel, barricading the entrance. Black Jack's men build a huge fire before the entrance and are burning out the pair, who flee up a shaft and gain the top after a fierce rifle battle.

With this is shown a fine Vitagraph feature "The Blind Adventurer," starring Betty Howe and Edward Earle.
