WEAR SOMETHING, HELEN—OR, THEY WON'T LET YOU DANCE AGAIN.

HELEN MOLLER IN A DANCING COSTUME.

Dancing in the nude? Not for New York! Helen Moller danced, sans visible garments, on the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House. The audience hissed and booed—some left the theater. Her next performance was greeted by a corporal's guard. And Mayor Hylan ruled: "Such things must not be. What we couldn't allow in a cheap burlesque, we can't allow in the Metropolitan Opera House." Helen won't quite agree that she did dance nude. "I was chiffon-draped," she explained. The chiffon was draped behind her from her finger tips, others said.
