Do Bad Teeth Cause Disease?

YES, say leading authorities. Their answer is based on years of study and on specific cases. So-called rheumatism is very often the result of infection reaching the blood from infected gums and decayed teeth, or by an infected tonsil. "But I have none of those troubles," you say. "Changes are a few minutes examination will show infection somewhere which is causing your 'rheumatism.'"

Deep-seated tooth infections are quickly located with the X-Ray. The wonderful invention is now successfully adapted to the use of the dentist.

Many diseases of childhood may be caused by infection from a diseased tooth. A large percent of cases of ulceration of the digestive tract are found to be due to dental diseases. Pus, coming from teeth, gums, tonsils, or any other point in the body, may cause infection in any organ of the body. Today the physician and surgeon often recommend the curing of tooth troubles before they attempt to treat other ailments.

Getting Ready for School

The future men and women of America will trot off to school next Monday morning.

Probably at no time during the past fifty years has a school term meant so much to America as the school term of 1918. With the nation calling young men and young women for the fight for freedom, it becomes incumbent upon parents to see that their young daughters and sons secure the very best education possible, so that America might still remain in the forefront of the nations and lead the world to democracy.

In the years to come, there will be much to do. The training and education that you give to your children now, will be a great help to them when the time comes to battle for the commerce of the world.

So start the children off to school next Monday morning right, and see that they have the proper clothes—see that they have the proper school needs, and send them away with a cheery smile, with instructions that they attend their school days continuously and study diligently so that they may be a pride to their parents and an honor to their nation.

You will find a complete assortment of everything the school boy and school girl needs in our children's wear department.
