"The most talented little chap I have ever seen," is a fair sample of the expressions heard commending the remarkable little Erminie, who was one of the chief attractions at the concert and recital given by the Army and Navy Auxiliary Tuesday evening of this week at the High School auditorium. Erminie is a Baker child, and her talents have given a name far and wide, which she thoroughly deserves.

Preceding the program Tuesday evening, Mrs. Stella Ingle, a member of the Army and Navy Auxiliary made a brief announcement, stating the entertainment was given to replenish the fund for the boys' mess fund. Her remarks were from the heart, for her boys are in the country's service, and when she finished everyone present had a broader and better view of the undertakings and noble work being done by the Auxiliary.

The program opened with "The New Hall Columbia," a splendid selection by the Monday Club. This club is composed of Misses Elleen Deane, Jeanette Stoddard, Dorothy Meyers, Julia Hopkins, Faye McKinnis, Ethel Wright, Frederika Schilke, Leona and Mary Newlin and Mrs. Hal Bohnenkamp; with Mr. Frank Clark as accompanist. This club is one of the leading musical organizations of the city.

Land under direction of Mrs. A. L. Richardson has shown great progress, until now these ladies are recognized for the capable and faultless manner they render vocal work.

Following the opening selection little Erminie flitted upon the stage like a little fairy and took the audience in her little arms, as it were, there to hold them as long as she chose to do so. Every movement of the child was pleasing. She is grace and simplicity combined with a God-given talent for speaking that is very seldom found in children much older than Erminie. In her first appearance she rendered, "Helping Hands," "The Tadpole's Mistake," and "Joe's Pore Christmas."

"I'm a Wild Rose" was beautifully sung by the Monday Club, and Miss Newlin executed the aesthetic dance to the pleasure of the entire audience.

Little Erminie then appeared in the "Japanese Song," "Ain't You Got Me," and "Daisy's Faith."

Equipped for Beach and Swimming

Little children take to the water like ducklings and ought to be given a chance to learn to swim, wherever their lot may be cast. This is an essential part of their education and might well be a part of public school instruction, as gymnastics are, since safety and assurance and pleasure in the water in after life depend upon it. Some youngsters learn so early that they hardly remember the time. Boys, who like to travel in gangs, shift for themselves if there is any water in walking distance that will give them a chance for water sports, and teach one another how to swim, often by the role methods. Girls make fine swimmers, and certainly ought to be given a chance to learn at the earliest time possible.

Nearly all the bathing suits for girls under fourteen are made like the knitted wool suit shown in the picture. The body and the short and narrow but elastic skirt are in one piece—the body long-waisted. Separate, close-fitting trunks are stitched to the body, a little below the normal waistline, and the suit buttons on one shoulder with two rather large bone buttons. Caps to be worn in the water are of rubber cloth, and made in light colors and fanciful ways. They serve to distinguish their little wearers' heads among many others when the beaches are crowded, as well as keep the hair dry. Many of the suits are blue, with bands in white and in strong colors. Bright green, banded with white, and bright orange banded with black are favorites this season. With these usually there are rubber caps to match, made in many ways, so that watching mothers may easily keep an eye on the particular head that is her care.

Most youngsters are barefooted unless the beach is rocky, in which case soft cloth shoes protect them. Some suits are provided with a knitted sash, matching its border in color, and finished with yarn tassels, but it is merely for ornament and not needed. It is a pretty embellishment, however, that gives tone to the plain little suit, as may be gathered from the picture.

Creating Space.

By creating legitimate places for possessions that otherwise would be out of place one can gain an effect of spaciousness and order, and give even small city quarters the capacity to hold a great deal without seeming crowded.

that he is permitted to live in a country where the Stars and Stripes float and a country that produces such dear little girls as Erminie.

Mrs. Oliver McDowell was pleasantly surprised last Monday evening when eight Neighbors of Woodcraft, with a number of guests, met at her home in observation of her birthday anniversary. Before retiring in the evening, Mrs. McDowell had improved her hallway with a liberal coat of oil. Hence, when guests unexpectedly arrived, there was considerable hurrying about in finding the material necessary to bridge the route to the living room. Nevertheless, the general good social time and entertainment following amply compensated for any such delays in attaining it. After several hours spent in neighborly, social time—light refreshments of punch and wafers were served just before the guests departed for their homes. Mrs. McDowell was presented with a beautiful geranium plant, in token of the respect and esteem of her associate Neighbors.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Bradley, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Allstott, Mrs. Sadie Stacey, Mrs. Ada Clark, Mrs. Eliza Murray, Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Robbs and daughter, Miss Daisy Robbs.

The regular monthly social of the Eastern Star Past Matrons was held last Friday at the home of Mrs. Arthur C. Williams. After a pleasant social afternoon, all being busily employed with knitting or similar work, light refreshments were served. Mrs. Fred Schilke, Grand Past Matron, and Mrs. Ed. Kiddle, Grand Past Elector, and twelve regular members of the club were present.
