Beatrice's Aunt Marjorie was to be married and Beatrice was to be the flower girl. They were to have their pictures taken before the ceremony and the bride was looking sad, or so thought Beatrice. Looking around the room, Beatrice spied the Kewpie doll, dressed as a bride, which had done duty at a previous shower. Beatrice said, "Don't look so sad, Aunt Marjorie—smile. Smile like the Kewpie doll."

SHERRY'S

"FIND THE WOMAN."

"Find The Woman," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, which will be the attraction in the Sherry Theater today is a powerful love drama giving Alice Joyce one of her most appealing roles and giving full sway to her marked emotional talent. She is seen first as a beautiful young opera singer, the ambition of her life, that of being a prima donna, already within her grasp, then ambition, love, life are crushed and she seeks refuge in a convent. A year of peace passes and going again out into the world she finds the peace and happiness denied her before.

The story is by Stanley Olmstead, from suggestions by O. Henry's "Cherchez la Femme." Most of the characters are French and the scenes laid in the old French quarter in New Orleans. Tom Terris, who directed the picture, has been most happy in his location. The supporting cast is of exceptional strength including Walter McGrail, Arthur Donaldson, Jessie Stevens, Jean Paige, Henry Hourst, and Mary K. Carr.

Also a comedy.

ARCADE

"A LITTLE PATRIOT."

In "A Little Patriot," in which Baby Marie Osborne appears at the Arcade Theater on Wednesday, this little star comes into her own. It is one of the best in which she has ever appeared, being characterized by the delightful comedy touches that made the Baby famous and it also has a strong and timely vein of drama. The cast includes Ernest, the wonderful little colored boy who has been seen in recent Baby pictures.

The points of particular interest in "A Little Patriot" are the personality and talent of the little star, the child appeal, the wholesome humor, which is largely contributed by the military drilling by a bunch of children and especially the little negro boy.

In "A Little Patriot," which is the latest vehicle for that really wonderful actress, Baby Marie Osborne, Pathe has a picture that is pleasing and will undoubtedly have a wide appeal, owing principally to the power of the star to grip her audience. There is something in the personality of tiny Miss Osborne that gets to you and as she enacts scene after scene it will be found that your attention is directed solely at her, except perhaps in those scenes in which she is assisted by the little negro boy and then the interest is divided evenly. The story is strong enough to stand as a vehicle and it has the value of not calling on the featured player to do things that would seem preposterous. It shows how a little girl makes her father enlist, then drills a group of her friends ranking from the ages of five to ten into a corps of earnest patriots who are the cause of the capture of a German spy and finally the means of reuniting the parents and her grandfather, who were estranged for many years. All of the children in the picture are well trained and they furnish many of the pleasing moments. Herbert Standing is good as the grandfather and Marion Warner makes a likeable young mother, while Jack Lanning does well with the part of the father. "The Little Patriot" will meet with the widest approval. The child appeal will bring popularity everywhere and the patriotic tone has value.
