ARCADE

"ZAZA" AT ARCADE SUNDAY.

Zaza is a popular singer in one of the gayest music halls in Paris. She leads a very tempestuous life and is much sought after by the beaux of the town. One night she meets Bernard, a man about town, behind the scenes and, after a frivolous flirtation, falls deeply in love with him. It is not long before he establishes her in an apartment where they live happily for several months.

Her infatuation for Bernard is the only real and lasting emotion that Zaza has ever experienced and she dedicates her whole crude nature to the task of making him happy. It is therefore a terrible blow to her when she discovers that Bernard is married and has a little daughter. Stung to the depths of her savage nature by the duplicity of the only man she ever really cared for, Zaza's first thought is for revenge.

With fiendish accuracy she hits upon the plan of going straight to the wife of her betrayer and announcing herself his mistress as the one best method of obtaining the vengeance which she craves. While still in the heat of her passionate hatred of Bernard, she sets out on her cruel mission, but meets the little daughter before she has an opportunity of denouncing her lover to the mother.

The sweet simplicity of the child, her ingenuousness and her delightful generosity so touched the grief-stricken Zaza that she cannot find it in her heart to crush the child under the blackening weight of the scandal which she knows would follow her through the rest of her life. So it happens that the daughter of Bernard saves him from disgrace.

Totally disillusioned, Zaza now dismisses her lover and returns to the stage. She soon attains marvelous popularity and becomes the idol of Paris. Hearing of her triumphs, Bernard comes to renew his attentions of Zaza, and she, in the supreme struggle of her life against the overwhelming love which she still has for the man, finally conquers her own emotions and sends him back to the wife and child, who are still in total ignorance of his double life.

Zaza, with Bernard forever dismissed from her mind, devotes her life to the drama in which she attains the pinnacle of fame.

"Zaza" was produced under the joint direction of Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford, who also collaborated in the production of the masterpiece, "The Eternal City," in which Miss Frederick made her screen debut. Zaza will be shown at the Arcade theatre Sunday only.

WAR REVIEW

With the Colors

Have been on a long hike taking me through lots of historic towns that stand as witnesses to German barbarity. I learned from Mr. Clark through Mr. King where the La Grande boys were. King arrived here the morning of October 30th, and the next day started to find them. They are a long way from here and I had many interesting experiences finding them, but I will have to tell you of them when I come home. After all day of riding on motor trucks and anything else I could find I arrived at their camp at about 8 p. m. About an hour later I found the bunch. Their hospital tents were set up in the ruins of a little town on a hill top. All that remained of the town was a pile of rocks and a few walls of buildings that had remained partly standing. You cannot imagine the total destruction that has been wrought upon the little towns in the wake of the German retreat. They have just been shelled by the Allies to the Germans out, then blown up by the Germans before their evacuation and then shelled by the Germans after being occupied by the Allies. You can imagine what is left!

I was directed to a tent where much laughter could be heard and I would find the La Grande boys there. It was their receiving tent where the wounded are first brought and as there was nothing doing at the moment, the night shift was seated around the fire telling stories. I stuck my head in and asked if this was the La Grande bunch. One of the boys came out and it turned out to be Ralph Poston. I didn't recognize him at first, he looked so much bigger and fatter in his uniform. I inquired for Tub and Ralph said he was over in the dugout so we started across the road and

GEORGE WALSH IN "THE PRIDE OF NEW YORK TODAY ONLY

George Walsh is the son of a building contractor. He is the ordinary type of east sider, getting his education in the public school and of course again meets the is ambitious.

Contrasting with George is a New York fop—the son of a rich man. He spends his time in the gay whirl, going to the best restaurants, having no business but that of spending his father's money.

He is quite fond of a beautiful girl, the daughter of a wealthy New Yorker. One day, when George standing on an iron beam, is hoisted twenty stories, this girl makes George's acquaintance.

Of course she thinks nothing of him at the time, but after the declaration of war against Germany and the call comes for the drafted men, both George and the fop are taken into the army.

With their soldier uniforms on George and the fop are on the same level. Money doesn't count. They're both soldiers. The girl comes to the camp to see the fop and of course again meets the athletic George. George is busy. He has brains and likes work. Everybody likes him. The fop is snobbish and does not get along.

When the soldiers go to the trenches in France, the girl follows as a Red Cross nurse. When she is about to be captured by the Germans, George saves her and they fall deeply in love with each other. When the fop loses the love of the girl he reforms and becomes, like George, a regular fellow.

through the ruins to a small opening about four feet square that led down a long stairway into a system of passageways. The boys say they can find the opening from any place in the town in about twenty seconds when the big shell or begin to come over.

We went down 30 feet below the surface where the tunnel, which is six feet by four and a half feet, branched into three tunnels of the same dimensions. We started down one of these, crowding along between the bunks and the walls in search of Tub. The bunks are about two and one-half feet wide and double deckers. They are built end to end, the board forming the head of one is the foot of the next. They have chicken wire for springs and straw for mattresses. The boys hang their clothes on the opposite walls and you can imagine the difficulty of getting through that two foot aisle. Many of the boys were in bed and reading by candle light. It was sure good to see them all as they sat up in bed and stretched out rough, and none too clean, but honest lands to shake mine which were the dirtiest of all. I felt like I was back home among all the familiar faces. Kenneth Carpy was the first one I saw. He is not so fat as he used to be but seems to be in the best of condition. Homer Lettel, who sleeps above Tub was all fixed up for the night but came to life and greeted me with a regular shake. Bobbie Pattison sleeps next to Homer and had "hit the hay" with his spare clothes piled on top of his bed to keep him warm. He was sleeping between rough blankets with most of his clothes on and I was horrified to see a three days growth of whiskers on his face. He was brown and healthy looking and the whiskers were due to a lack of a chance to shave. Water is scarce and hot water scarcer so the boys do the best they can.

Well Tub wasn't at home, so I waited while Ralph went to hunt him up and presently a commotion down the aisle denoted his coming. He surely has grown both in height and width. He was browned and bewhiskered and none too clean from living in dugouts and handling maddy patients, but otherwise he looked about the same old Tub. However when he shook my hand I appreciated that he was not the same as he nearly crushed the bones.

Well we all stood around and talked for an hour and then Tub and I went to one of the receiving tents where we slept on a couple of cots made up for patients. The ward was nearly empty. We got into bed and started to talk when the boys I hadn't seen began to come in. John Stoddard, "Willie" Williamson, Jay Conley, Charlie Harding, "Fat" McGinnis and a lot more sat around on the cots while we talked of back home and swapped stories of our experiences. I guess the old Rainbow Division has had the most experiences of any bunch in France. They sure have a great reputation all over France—and they have earned it. Our boys have contributed their share to the rep and have made quite a name for themselves within the division. They are known as the "Hiking 167th" as on their big hike last winter they were only allowed to lead once as the rest couldn't keep up.

Well we talked until midnight and then the boys left and we tried to sleep.

I was very tired from my all day trip, and was soon asleep in spite of the guns which were shooting on three sides of us. But I didn't sleep long. About two-thirty I was awakened by a roar of guns that
