DESERTED TOWN FOUND IN ALASKA

is what I call a good catch for three hours.

The Alaskan mountains are full of berries that are called up there, high bush red huckleberries. Blue berries, salmon berries and especially around Ketchikan, the red raspberries abound in the warmer sheltered places. These patches of red raspberries have a rather interesting history, having been set out by the natives of an Indian village, which is no more to be seen. It is a rather picturesque little village, many neat cottages having been left, when a disease broke out among the population and forced their departure. They established a small village about 20 miles distant, which is called Metlactien. The women work in the cannery in the summer and fish and hunt summer and winter. It is a very easy place to live in. There are fish, game, clams and crabs in abundance. In fact you can find very nearly all of the necessities for a meal in and about Ketchikan, and its little sister town of Metlactien.

On one of our trips we had a school of porpoises follow our boat for quite a distance. Although we were full speed ahead at seven knots an hour, the way those porpoises frisked about out bow, jumping over the bow and circling around it, it seemed as if we were standing still. I judge that they varied in weight from 20 to 50 pounds. The meat is not only edible and often used for steaks, but the leather is often used for shoestrings. It is very difficult to catch them as they stay in deep water and are very agile and quick in their motions. Another interesting fish of these waters is the dogfish, between 10 and 25 pounds in weight and similar in appearance to the ordinary shark, their upper jaw projecting outward in the same way. I was told that in catching the shark, the dogfish will turn over on its back and attack it from beneath.

The Ketchikan cannery covers about one block. They have three large oil-boilers and employ about 80 Japanese and the same number of Chinese and Indians. Many of these common laborers make as high as $8.50 per day, filling half-pound cans by hand. The pound cans are packed by machinery. The Oriental laborers are hired by the season, by contractors of their own nationality. The salmon put up in the cannery is nice and fresh, and very clean. One of our record seven-day runs, we put up 24,000 cases. The run lasted about 90 days. We did not get so many fish toward the last of the season.

During the 90 days of the run, we put up 100,000 cases of salmon. They are classified according to reds, pinks, chums and cohoes.

Ketchikan is excellently supplied with drinking water. It is piped down from the springs of the mountains and runs into two large lakes. The cannery uses a large amount of this water, and the town for power.

Returning home on the boat, I talked with a man from the far north. He told me that on his trip down, his boat had to stop for about two hours to let the moose go by. He thought that there must have been fully 2000 in the herd, which crossed below the boat. A strange thing about this is that the time or road of their return to the north is never known. But one man always return at a certain time of the year and find them there.

The entire trip was a great pleasure to me. I found passing the time a very lonely task before I learned to work in the cannery. After the salmon run opened, of course I could find no companions for my rambles and hunting trips and I was forced to spend my time alone. So my son-in-law, foreman of the Ketchikan cannery, installed me in his plant as a star apprentice in his kitchen, and I made the record of cooking all of the season's catch, which amounted to around 100,000 cases.

CHARLES NASH RETURNS

Motor Plant Has Record of $37,000,000 in War Supplies

When Charles W. Nash laid aside the presidency of the General Motors Co., some years ago, and went fishing, he returned with the Thomas B. Jeffery Co. hooked and safely stowed in his bag. Now, upon completion of another, and far greater undertaking as Chief in charge of production and engineering for the Bureau of Aircraft Production, he has gone hunting. Knowing that Nash usually runs true to form the trade is awaiting his return with feelings of mingled curiosity and interest.

Upon relinquishment of his work as direct assistant to Assistant Secretary of War Ryan, Nash, in his own quiet way, acknowledged no small degree of satisfaction over a duty well done, but unbounded enthusiasm over his return to his own enterprise in the Nash Motors Co., at Kenosha. The stewardship of this big concern during Nash's four months' absence has been ably administered by C. B. Voorhis, the general sales manager, and his associates, brought together and trained under the Nash supervision. "It is a great satisfaction again to be on the ground with my own organization," Nash said. "This factory has been active in the production of trucks and other materials ever since this country's entry into the war—was, in fact, active in supplying our Allies before the war. During this period our plant has sold over $37,000,000 worth of transportation equipment. At the request of the government we greatly increased our manufacturing facilities. Fortunately, these are of such an order that they can be immediately turned to the production of Nash passenger cars and trucks for general consumption. While the readjustment to normal conditions will take some time, I believe the country is to see great prosperity in the next three or four years and am sure that the motor car industry will profit to its full share."

SOLDIERS AND FRENCH GIRLS

The American girl has been troubled somewhat by the stories of increasing marriages between their French sisters and the American boys over there. Clara Savage, in November Good Housekeeping, seeks to throw some light on the situation. To quote:

There's no doubt about it. American men do like French girls. But when you find how glad men back from the front or from camps in small French villages are to meet a girl from America, it makes you feel that it would be a great mistake for the girls at home to waste time worrying about the charms of their French sisters.

NO IDLE TALK—JUST WORK. HONEST WORK—IS THE ARGUMENT FOR THE WONDERFUL CASE FARM TRACTOR—

Every farmer can hear a lot of cheap talk about what a tractor and that tractor can do, or they can be shown printed testimonials of what such and such a tractor has done in some remote part of the world—

Frankly, I do not deal in that sort of "hush-waw," but I do show you what the CASE TRACTOR will do—

And in showing you, I will convince you that it is the only practical machine now on the market. "Broad assertion," you say. Is it?

Name the field, state the time for a demonstration and get out any one or a dozen different tractors to compete with the Case and we will send them all to the shed, just as the Kentucky Thoroughbred used to send the doggie race horses to the shed in the days of horse racing.

The Case is every inch a tractor of merit, a TRACTOR OF DEPENDABILITY—a Tractor that gives your money's worth.

Tell the Tractor salesman who tries to interest you in a machine that talk means little—what you want is performance. Let him show you. Set him onto us—we want him—we want to compete with him. Don't be backward about telling him that Chandler is looking for him with a CASE TRACTOR, for that is what I am doing.

I will take on all comers, and there is nothing personal about this remark, for all the men selling tractors are good fellows, but they have not the tractor you want. When they compete with a CASE the reasons will be apparent to you.

Yours for Economical Farming,

J. A. CHANDLER.

SOCIETY

Miss Dorothy Meyers entertained a number of girl friends at an informal dancing party on Wednesday evening. Light refreshments were served late in the evening.

The Meyersick, Kimmel and McKay families celebrated Thanksgiving in the real, hospitable manner of our forefathers, when they met for a day of feasting and social reunion. After one of Mrs. Meyersick's delicious and bounteous dinners beneath which the table seemed all insufficient, the guests spent the afternoon in various pleasant diversions. Before leaving for home in the evening weary with the day's activities, an abundance of fresh, sweet cider, which had been prepared by the gentlemen of the party during the afternoon was greatly enjoyed and indulged in. Mrs. Meyersick was voted as a 1 cook by the entire party and all repaired to their homes with the firm intention of arranging a similar festival at an early date. Those present aside from the Meyersick family were: Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Kimmel and children, Jennie, Florence, Carlos and Mable and Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Hoyt and children, Myrtle and Mildred.
