ENSING HEROES.

Work of Submarine Fighters Is But Little Known.

At 4:12 p. m. sighted a small cargo carrier near Haleship. Shortly after we passed her. Sounds of shells attracted our attention. A German submarine had engaged her. While sending wireless calls for help, the gunner of the cargo ship was working energetically. We crept up unobserved to 600-yd. range, and released the two torpedoes. This struck the German submarine amidships, and she sank. Wreckage was scattered over a large radius.

This laudable report was a summary of the first naval encounter between the Hun sea pirates, and the United States submarine flotilla, in foreign waters. In the six months following, at least 14 more of the enemy were accounted for. This is the conservative estimate, based on over 40 successful sea duels in which the enemy was known to have been damaged. On paper, in the terse official language this sort of success is robbed of its high dramatic quality. We can picture easily the stun, graceful destroyer, plowing through the rollers like the torpedo it fires—or dodges. We can see the chase. At 50, knots or better, the white foam curling over her bow like whiskers over the chin of a Moray, patriarch, the destroyer plunges at the spot where a U-boat was seen to submerge. As she passes, during the torpedo certainly aimed to head her off, she drops depths charge from the stern. White smoke rises behind her. Perhaps she got her quarry; one rarely knows. The point is that we can visualize this encounter. On the other hand, we see one submarine rise suddenly from the depths, discharge a torpedo or two at another submarine, and then sink out of sight again. There is nothing spectacular—unless one of the torpedoes finds its mark.

The sensations incident to running into an unexpected mine field while in pursuit of the enemy are told succinctly by the report of a British submarine commander. "While running submerged we felt a succession of light taps on the steel. Then our propeller tangled and hydroplane could not be moved. I gave the signal to stop instantly, but in the next second I heard the scarping of some metallic object along the side. It could be only one thing, and while we sat waiting for that mine to explode all of us trembled. As quickly as possible I sent out a diver. He reported that the anchor lines of two mines were wrapped about our propeller and hydroplane. In 15 minutes we were free."

Initial report to be sent to the admiralty. The sensation of the mine, impressed several pathos before the surface and hearing the contact points of a German mine scumpling about the submarine. A sign of these frail steel fingers is seen, a class 901 inside a crushed. The contents of this mine a certain red—run down into the mine, making an electric cell, and producing an explosion that exploded the charge. In this particular instance all that saved the submarine was the fact that the collision between the mine and the side of the ship had been so gentle that none of the contact fingers had been broken. Popular Mechanics.

For Croup.

"Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is splendid for croup," writes Mrs. Edward Hassett, Franklin, N. Y. "My children have been quickly relieved of attacks of this dreadful complaint by its use." This remedy contains no opium or other narcotic, and may be given to a child as confidently as to an adult.—Adv.

REPAIRS IN REMEMBERING YOU DON'T NEED.

The Red Cross shop and salvage department is in need of the following:

Clean cotton rags, ladies' suits, coats, old skirts, sweaters, shoes, stockings, men's suits, overcoats, pants, sweaters, shoes; children's wearing apparel of all kinds, rubber tires of all kinds, inner tubes, old tin bottles, old iron, and in fact anything which can be sold and which is of no value to you. Salvage is something you do not need, and the Red Cross shop must continue until Red Cross needs no more. So give us your cooperation to make it the success it has been the past few months. The ladies who have been clerking in the shop have made sacrifices and have manifested the same interest as though the little shop belonged to them, and in a sense it does. All we ask for is that the public feel the same interest. Articles may be brought or they will be called for. Phone Math 754. 12-7-18

ACQUIRING A PERFECT FIGURE

Most women who have perfect figures did not have them originally. They have acquired them. A woman gradually takes the shape of her corset so the corset produced by the most artistic designer is the right one to wear to secure a perfect figure.

Modart Corsets Front Laced are most symmetrically and artistically designed. They are comfortable, stylish and gradually mold the figure into those beautiful lines that every woman admires and desires.

PAULINE LEDERLE

During these days of so much influenza and other reasonable complaints the people generally could keep in much better health by being thoughtful and using these simple home remedies and antiseptic washes, rather than the so much advertised patent medicines and nostrums, which is only a sly way of helping you to get rid of your money. We notice in at Silverthorn's Drug store that they are careful not to offer anything but real simple and yet effective remedies that are inexpensive and reliable.
