UNCLE SAM SAYS BACK TO SCHOOL

GOVERNMENT SAYS MOVEMENT SOON TO BE STARTED.

Children to Be Returned to the Schoolroom, According to Plans of Reconstruction

"Do your bit for reconstruction by going back to school!" This is what the children's bureau of the United States department of labor is saying to the thousands of children who during the war deserted the schools to enter industry. High wages and the labor shortage have proved an irresistible bait to many youngsters. Jobs offering little training and less "future" have been taken by children who are "tired of school," and "old enough to work anyway," or who feel that they must "help at home." Whatever their reason for wanting to work, the federal government has declared itself against their employment in firms having government contracts.

The children's bureau is sponsoring a back-to-school drive which will try to return to school those youngsters who have left too early for their own good, and for the good of the country. As in the two other drives of children's year the actual work of the campaign will be done by the millions of women in the local child welfare committees of the council of national defense. A back-to-school committee will be appointed for each of the 281,000 school houses in the United States. The first task of these committees will be to study the local child labor and school attendance laws. When these have been mastered, a list of the pupils who should have returned to school this year, but failed to do so, will be gotten from the school records of the county superintendent, the school principals, and the teachers. Then committee members will call on the parents, and talk over with them why and how it will benefit their child to go back to school.

In many cases financial assistance is necessary to enable the child to take up his studies again. Many communities will give this assistance in the form of scholarships, similar to those now offered in a few high schools, and in practically all colleges and universities. It is hoped that at least one scholarship will be founded for each public school in the country. That would allow 281,000 children to return to school, who could not do so otherwise. The scholarships will have an average value of $120, which will keep a child in school for a year.

The refusal of the federal government to employ children in the war industries gives point to the bureau's contention that they should not be allowed to form a cheap source of labor for the peace industries. The war labor policies board, the United States employment service, and the United States boys' working reserve have all taken a stand against employing children under 14. The policy of all these organizations has been to discourage the employment of children under 16, and to urge the child to go back to school.

As the bureau points out, the drive's success depends upon the co-operation that it gets. The teachers can either make or mar it, for it is they who will have to show the returned child that the schoolroom can give him an equipment so useful for the future that it entirely outweighs the present high wages. The schools will be called upon to adapt themselves more and more to developing and changing needs; and finally the community needs to cooperate in demanding that child labor and school attendance laws be enforced, and that the children have the advantage of vocational training and guidance, so that, as President Wilson says, "the nation may be strengthened as it can only be through the right education of all its people."

HOOD RIVER ROADS GOOD
HOOD, RIVER, Jan. 2.—Although the Columbia highway is officially closed between Souny and Viento, a good many Hood River motorists have made the trip to Portland, with little or no difficulty. A heavy frost has prevailed and this section of the road is in fine shape and will continue to be until a thaw or rain sets in. Work on the highway is suspended while the frost continues.

DALLAS BOY WOUNDED
DALLAS, Jan. 2.—A telegram received from the war department states that Private Walter L. W. Miller, Co. 1, 162 Infantry, had been seriously injured on November 11, the last day of fighting.

NOTICE TO WATER USERS
Owing to the cold weather and other conditions incident to winter weather it is not practicable to read all water meters during the winter months. As the supply of water at Beaver Creek is limited, it is therefore hereby notified that all water used in excess of the minimum will be charged for when meters are read in the spring.

Few Escape
There are few indeed who escape having at least one cold during the winter months, and they are fortunate who have but one and get through with it quickly and without any serious consequences. Take Chamber-
