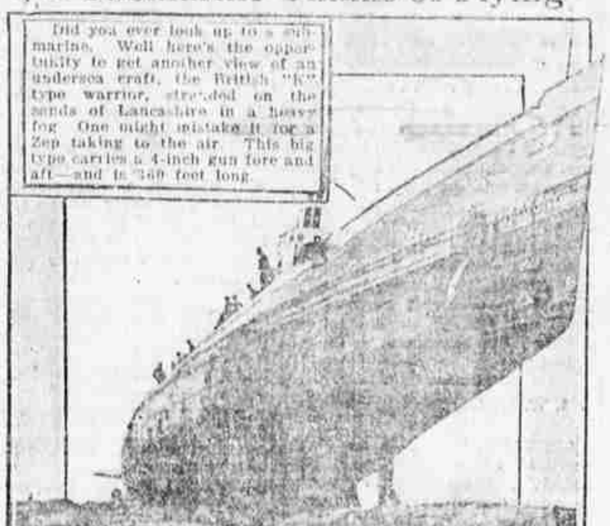
WEATHER FOOLS HENS

CHICAGO, March 3.—The beautiful spring-like weather Chicago has been enjoying for the past week or so has evidently slipped one over on the hen. She got it into her head, bless her, that it's March or early April, and—

"The egg market is crazy," said a leading Chicago broker. "Eggs ought to be scarce and high. Instead they are plentiful and one of the cheapest foods on the market."

A Submarine Thinks of Flying



Did you ever look up to a submarine. Well here's the opportunity to get another view of an undersea craft, the British "K" type warrior, stranded on the sands of Lancashire in a heavy fog. One might mistake it for a Zep taking to the air. This big type carries a 4-inch gun fore and aft—and is 360 feet long.

NO "LAZY WEEDS"

Kansas Woman Works Wonders With Her Big Gardens.

The Weed Woman is by far the most important personage in Briar Creek, Kansas. Not many people in the state knows about Briar Creek, though sometimes tourists on the Santa Fe trail get lost and end up there, but even then they seldom find the Weed Woman's cabin, hidden by a bend of the creek. Nevertheless, those who once have seen her garden come again. She has beds of all the weeds that grow for miles around, carefully transplated, every one useful. There is not a "lazy weed" in the whole family.

She came from Tennessee in a covered wagon a long time ago, and in those days there were no gardens, so people ate the things that grew wild. There were no drug stores, so they made smartweed poultices. All the mothers in the county called on the Weed Woman when their babies are sick. "If the wounded soldiers just had some of my dandelion and elderberry wine!" she sighs. She has canned a great deal of milkweed, and lately discovered that a government bulletin advises this as an economy.

In Civil war days they served boiled milkweed, but it was not so good without seasoning. "In those times, though, you couldn't run up to Uncle Patch's and buy a nickel's worth of salt. Salt got to be as precious as money, and as scarce. And one day, I remember so well, ma said, "Well, this dish of milkweed is healthy, but it's taste ain't no 'count without salt.' Then if she didn't go out in the yard where we'd been curing and salting our hams for years and dig up all the earth around the old kettle. She boiled and boiled, till we got several handfuls of salt out of it."
