AROUND THE EDGES

Somebody if buy a playhouse for the kiddies if they call up Mrs. Talbott at the Red Cross. There is the finest kid homes ever built waiting for some indulgent parent.

It took some nerve on the part of "Put" to put on a one cent sale in these days of fifty cent dollars. Even the children on the streets will hardly stop to pick up a penny these days.

Chairman Bagg made an excellent selection when he placed Paul Spillman in charge of the Shorthorn activities for Union county—for no one knows the cattle breeding business better than does Paul.

Sam Brooks, the Caranza of Igber who just returned from kicking up his heels in California for several months, says the Observer got him in bad in a communication he sent and he asserts positively that the woman at the Red Cross canteen was wholly white and a pure bred American.

Ed Kiddle, the Victory Loan manager for Union county, has eaten crow to our knowledge in the past, but we did not know he had taken to baked owl until this week. When his wife made the fire in the cook stove the stove smoked and investigation showed that an owl had sought refuge in the chimney. When Mr. Kiddle saw the owl baked to a crisp he remarked, "I have tried everything else and guess I might as well eat my share of owl right now."

Speaking of milking the cows and running a dairy, W. K. Newell, assistant food administrator for Oregon who was in La Grande this week, can give you some expert testimony. He ran one of the best dairies the coast has ever known, but he sold out. In his own language he "could not even attend church because the cows had to be milked and the calves fed." Mr. Newell believes that the man who handles cows is a martyr and a patriot and there is nothing too good for him.

Mac Wood was in from Woodlawn ranch a few days ago looking as brown as Fred Gaskill after harvest time. When asked if he was still bothered with indigestion Mac said, "Indigestion? What's that—the only thing we are bothered with is getting enough to eat on the ranch. A plate of pork and beans is only a fair starter for a lunch these days." This back-to-nature cure is a wonderful thing, all right, but Bill Casey says he ratched when he was a kid and memories of the hard work still linger with him.

Dan Smythe was over from Pendleton this week with a grip—yes a grip. Now Jim Christiansen keeps quiet, for there was no booze in the grip for Dan is not that kind of a girl. There was three thousand dollars in gold in it however, and who would have thought even the money center of Pendleton could produce that much coin. Dan was here paying up on some leases which contained the gold coin clause, and he brought the gold. In speaking of various things across the mountains he said the most luxurious social function was now about ripe. It is an event where such sheepmen as himself and Newt Burgess give their friends an oyster supper, and it is said to far surpass the supper of the French chef—just oysters that are raised in the mountains around Kamela and Pilot Rock.

MARINES ARE DESCRIBED

United States marines are often confused with the sailors of the navy. They are not sailors—they are soldiers! When you see a soldier with a globe, anchor and eagle on his hat cap or helmet, you may know that he is a United States marine. That's the distinguishing badge—the trade mark of his service. It means that particular soldier belongs to an organization that is almost always mentioned in the same breath with the Foreign Legion, the Pennsylvania state constabulary, the northwest mounted police and the famous Texas rangers. It means that that particular soldier has received training that fits him to fight on land, at sea, or possibly in the air.

United States marines serve both on land, at sea and abroad. Some of them are serving overseas in France, Germany and Russia. Others are protecting American interests in Haiti, San Domingo, Nicaragua and Cuba, while others are serving aboard battleships and cruisers. Some marines are engaged in aviation, at naval aerostatic stations, while far off China claims several hundred who are on duty at the American legation at Peking. Several thousand more are employed in guarding navy yards and naval stations, but everywhere, in any climate or place, where American interests need protection or where there is war, or threatened war, you'll always find the soldier who wears the globe, anchor and eagle. The marines are trained, clothed and equipped very much as are soldiers of the land forces. In their preliminary instruction at the recruit depot, they are instructed and drilled in the duties of infantry soldiers, field artillerymen and machine gunners. In preparation for their duties as landing parties from ships of the navy, for expeditionary duty and as defenders of naval bases, they are further trained in aviation, in the use of portable searchlights, the wireless telegraph, the heliograph and the various other methods of signalling; range finding, the erection, operation and maintenance of telegraph and telephone lines, the planting of land and submarine mines, the handling of torpedoes, the erection and demolition of bridges and the building of roads.

In their service aboard battleships and cruisers, the marines form a part of the ship's complement for battle, manning the six-inch, five-inch, three-inch and six-pound guns of the intermediate and secondary batteries, and anti-aircraft guns. They are trained and fully equipped for instant service as landing parties for duties ashore. Enlistments in the United States marine corps are for four years. All necessary clothing is furnished free by the government—uniforms, shirts, socks, underwear and shoes. When an enlisted man is discharged from the service, he is entitled to transportation and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of application for enlistment.

The regular pay of marines varies from $30 to $75 a month, according to the rank and length of service. A man starts in as a private at $30 a month and climbs up in accordance with his own merits and individual efforts. Should he qualify with the service rifle his pay will be increased $2 a month for marksman, $3 a month for sharpshooter or $5 a month for expert rifleman; according to which of these qualifications he attains. Likewise, if he qualifies with the great guns aboard ship his pay is increased from $2 to $10 a month, according to his qualification and the class of gun at which he is stationed. Vacancies are constantly occurring in the non-commissioned grades, and men are selected to fill them in accordance with their records, individual merits and ability to perform the duties of the higher positions. Encouragement and opportunity are given to young men of good character and ability to remain in the service and climb to the higher positions of trust and honor. With these advantages for the physical training and development and the advantages of a library and reading room containing good books, and current periodicals, and ample time for reading and study, no hesitancy is felt in recommending the marine corps to any young man who is desirous of improving himself mentally, morally and physically.

To enlist in the marine corps an applicant must be not less than five feet four inches and not more than six feet two inches in height; weigh not less than 128 pounds nor more than 240 pounds nor less than 18 nor more than 35 years of age for enlistment as a private; able to read, write and speak the English language with ease; native born or naturalized citizen of the United States; steady and regular habits; unmarried and with no one wholly dependent upon him for support; of good health, strong constitution, well formed, sound as to eyes, ears, nose and throat, and not addicted to the use of any kind of intoxicants or drugs. Any other information relative to the United States marine corps will gladly be given by the recruiting sergeant at room 21, Commerce block, 101 S. Broadway, Portland, Ore.

The new administration announced plans for carrying the present campaign for membership into an early and successful conclusion, for an effort to shorten the length of meetings, and to institute a ladies' night or ladies' day. To accomplish the latter purpose an early effort is to be made to ascertain the desires of the ladies among the Elk membership, which now approximates eight hundred and fifty.
The Elks' swimming tank is to be remodelled and fitted in early use, and the entire building will be renovated and given a spring house-cleaning.
La Grande Lodge of Elks has had a wonderful month within the last year. About twenty applications are received each meeting night, and indications of large classes are frequent. The completion of the splendid new Elks temple at 200 West 2nd street places La Grande lodge at a distinct advantage over other sister lodges in Eastern Oregon which are housed in buildings of inferior construction. Built for $100,000, the new Elks temple will be ready for occupancy in a few days.
