GEORGE SMALL QUITS NEWSPAPER WORK

Veteran Publisher of Baker Democrat Retires After Thirty-Two Years in the Harness

BAKER, April 14.—After a journalistic career in Baker which covers a period of 32 years with the coming of the 7th day of next month, during all of which time he has been associated with I. B. Bowen, Sr., in the ownership of The Morning Democrat, Mr. G. B. Small yesterday disposed of his interest in the Bowen-Small Publishing Company to Messrs. Will H. Evans and I. B. Bowen, Jr., and last evening left for Seaside, where his family is sojourning and a contemplated visit to California expecting to be away from Baker most of the summer.

The new associated owners of this newspaper are young men too well known in this community where they have lived all of their lives to need an introduction to Baker people. Their splendid reputations are their best commendation. Mr. Evans has been in charge of the advertising and circulation departments of the Democrat for the past two years and has been successful to a marked degree. Mr. Bowen, since returning home from about two years' war service has been doing reporter work and has shown splendid capabilities. Both young men have the laudible ambition to make their future a success and to that end will lend their best efforts to receive the hearty support of the people in their future desire to serve them in publicity manner, to the end that the community will keep pace with the progressiveness that is sure to come by united energy and public spirit.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our friends for their consideration of us and their loyalty to our departed father who had been a resident of this valley for many years. We also wish to thank members of the Moose lodge who were very kind to us.

RUSSIAN PEASANTS FIGHT BOLSHEVISM

Large Portion of Army in Northern Russia is Not in Uniform, but Act From Patriotic Motive

WITH THE AMERICANS ON THE NORTH RUSSIAN FRONT, Feb. 8.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press)—In this international army which is fighting numerically superior Bolsheviki forces in North Russia there are, mingled with the half dozen or so varieties of uniforms, men who wear no uniforms at all. They fight, as did the franc-tireurs in the Franco-Prussian war and the first minute men of the American revolution, for the protection of their firesides.

They are peasants, bearded or beardless, with nothing to distinguish them from the thousands of other peasants living around them but their guns and cartridge belts. They are the irregular or "partisan" troops and the sentiments they are showing and fighting for in this wilderness of snow and pine trees loom up so patriotically that the government of Northern Russia is beginning to look upon them as the keystone on which to build a Russian state that will be free from Bolshevism.

These peasants have known the ravages of Bolsheviki troops in their villages. They have seen friends executed for anti-Bolsheviki activities. They hail the allies as rescuers. In nearly every attack the regular troops make against the enemy one finds these armed partisans, crack shots, going ahead of or along the flanks of the Americans, British, French and trained, uniformed Russians to scout a path or take a pot shot at the enemy.

The point of view of these peasants is this: "The army has not yet been organized; we are robbed and ill-treated by the Bolsheviki; therefore we have to defend ourselves." The peasants in the Kholmogory district, along the Dwina river, have been fighting for four months. Military authorities say they do their work as cheerfully and efficiently as regular soldiers. The Red Guards are helpless against the revolted population.

The appearance of peasants fighting voluntarily against Trotsky's forces has a demoralizing effect upon the Bolsheviki as it disabuses the minds of some of them of the theory that they are being opposed only by "imperialists."

The partisans know that if they are captured they will be shot. But, knowing the forest country as city dwellers know their own streets, they are seldom captured. In scouting they are as tireless as wild animals.

The government of the north for a long time did nothing to help the partisans, but, now that their usefulness is recognized, they and their families are provisioned as if they were regular soldiers. In December a big delegation of partisans went to Archangel and, according to the local newspapers, "this new apparition stirred up all the classes of population of the town." It became clear that a sound evolution from anarchy toward patriotism had taken place among the people, that the efforts of the partisans, though of a local character, must be supported, and that it was absolutely necessary to create a suitable atmosphere for further organization of partisan detachments. A big committee including all political parties has been formed in Archangel to aid in this plan and a new partisan newspaper is to be published for the benefit of the fighting peasants.

DEAN OF CANADIAN ARMY, VISITING HERE

Harry L. Dean, whose name was formerly in La Grande and at Starbuck, and who for a year and a half had been with the Canadian forces overseas, is here to spend a week or two visiting his sister, Mrs. Frank Briggs. Having failed to get into the United States army, Mr. Dean went from San Francisco to Vancouver, B. C., and enlisted with the Canadians in June, 1917. On arriving in England, however, his experience in the lumbering business was recognized and he was transferred to a Canadian forestry battalion and sent to Scotland to the lumber mills, where he was promoted to the rank of sergeant. Anxious to get to France, he finally secured his transfer back to his original unit, the University battalion of infantry, and was waiting for transportation across the channel when the armistice was signed. He was among the first of the Canadians to be returned and arrived on the Pacific coast again, via the Panama canal, in January. Mr. Dean is a native of England, but has lived the greater part of his life in the States. He had ample opportunity to study conditions in the old country today, as contrasted with conditions when he lived there as a boy. There has been a marvelous growth of the spirit of democracy among the British aristocracy, he says.

England's food policy, says Mr. Dean, enabled her to lay by supplies of foodstuffs in sufficient quantity to last the nation two years, had the Germans succeeded in establishing a total blockade of her ports, as they endeavored to do. The short rations on which the British people were put was not because there was not the food in the country, but because all possible supplies were being placed in storage.

He believes the greatest factor in stopping the depredations of the submarines was the mine field that was laid from the north coast of Scotland straight across to the coast of Norway and another wedge-shaped field up toward the Arctic. These mines, he says, did not require the ship to run directly on to them, but exploded on the near approach of a vessel.

A Message About Advertising

From the

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

If you are not advertising, then advertise because it saves money for you and it reduces the price to the consumer.

Advertising prevents profiteering. It insures honest profits and makes them permanent.

The message of the U. S. Department of Labor to merchants and manufacturers and to all progressive American business men is to advertise.

Tell the public about YOUR goods. The consumer has plenty of money. He is willing to spend it and we want him to spend it on American-made products. The easiest, quickest, and most economical way in which this can be accomplished is by advertising.

Start your campaign right now.
