world, higher organization of industry which will satisfy the reasonable demands of labor and insure continuous operation of the industrial machine at maximum efficiency. disposition of the railroads, the migration, rate in the cellar, bustling sawing at the foundations, lateral improvements, better public schools. These are the things people are thinking about.

The two big political parties are talking largely about the tariff, George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and making focus at each other. A powerful individual—Roosevelt or Wilson—emerges in one or the other—merges in one or the other—deciding in which one he shall emerge—and assumes leadership. But as a party neither has much that is distinctive to say about today's great questions or any really clean-cut, guiding body of live principles.

The next congress will be republican. It has a great opportunity to make that tax a much more distinctive badge of public service. Meanwhile, whether it lives up to that opportunity or not, the vital saving thing is here. There is in the United States—unorganized and not distinctively represented as yet by any party tag—a great body of live, sound American opinion, prudent, sensible, yet progressive; determined at bottom that this nation, already offering to its people the best conditions and the fairest opportunities that any great number of people have ever enjoyed in this earth, shall push steadily on by rational experimenting until its conditions and opportunities reach the attainable ideal; equally determined to take by the neck whatever crack-brained or malevolent enemies to peace, democracy and progress come in its way.

That saving American opinion demands reasonably honest, efficient service from its elected servants, irrespective of party tags congress must reckon with it.

The country is full of magazines, and it's a small "mag" nowadays that doesn't brag of a million circulation. Nevertheless there isn't a community in America where the local press doesn't exert more influence than all the magazines combined.

The "Admiral" Question Again Comes Up.

Admiral Sims, having finished his war task, is reduced in rank, becoming a mere "rear admiral" again. There is no question of the high ability with which this officer commanded the American fleet in European waters throughout the war, and the honor and esteem he won thereby at home and abroad. The secretary of the navy pays deserved tribute to his distinguished record. The whole nation recognized the worth of his achievement. His demotion is not a mark of dishonor at all, officially or otherwise. It is simply ordered in literal observance of the established law governing such cases.

Congress, some years ago, virtually abolished the rank of admiral by providing that such rank and title should be held only temporarily by naval officers while commanding the Atlantic or Pacific fleet or acting as chief of operations of the navy department. So, the Atlantic fleet being demobilized, Admiral Sims suffers an automatic reduction of rank and pay.

A recent report gives 70 rear admirals in our navy, 34 of them "permanent" and 36 "temporary." Sims is lost in a mass of rear admirals, few of whom are known at all outside of their immediate official groups.

It is time for congress to change this absurd regulation and permit the retention of the fine old title of "admiral" by men who have earned it—not merely as a deserved reward, but for the honor of the nation. It should no longer be said that any plebeian country able to afford a gunboat has its "admirals" outranking the highest officers of the sea and greatest navy in the world, which represents the greatest country in the world.

MODART CORSETS

WHY LOOK OLDER THAN YOU ARE?

It is astonishing how many women through lack of attention are wearing corsets that give a more mature appearance to the figure than it should have, and consequently they appear to be five or ten years older than they are.

It is possible to readily improve that condition if you will come to our corset department and get a trial fitting of the MODART front laced corset.
