MADE TIME OF GAY REUNION

"Beating the bounds" in Virginia, at Lost, Drew Together Neighbors From Far and Near.

"Beating the bounds" was a specially important duty in the colonies, where land surveys were imperfect and grants irregular, and the boundaries of each man's farm or plantation at first very uncertain. In Virginia this beating the bounds was called "proceeding." Landmarks were renewed that were becoming obliterated; blazes on a tree would be somewhat grown over—they were deeply recut; piles of great stones containing a certain number for identification were sometimes scattered—the original number would be restored. Special trees would be found fallen or cut down; new marking trees would be planted, usually pear trees, as they were long-lived. Disputed boundaries were decided upon and announced to all the persons present, some of whom at the next "proceeding" would even be able to testify as to the correct line. This proceeding took place between Easter and Whitsunday, that festive season of the year in Virginia; and must have proved a pleasant reunion of neighbors, a May party. In New England this was called "perambulating the bounds" and the surveyors who took charge were called "perambulators" or "bounders."—Alice Morse Earle in Child Life in Colonial Days.

DREADED SNAKE UNDER FALLS

According to Indian Superstition, Reptile's Breaking Loose Ended in Destruction of Villages.

Formerly, according to Indian superstition, there dwelt under Niagara falls a gigantic snake, which now and then would make its way to an Indian village and coil itself around the town. It swallowed the people, and made itself further obnoxious by poisoning the springs and wells with its spittle. The Hianssee river, in the southern Allegheny region, is infested by an enormous leech. Occasionally a certain ledge of rock is exposed when the water is low, so that people are
