QUEER MARRIAGE LAWS

How many persons who contemplate matrimony know the details of the marriage laws of their State? Very few perhaps, and not until their attention is called to it, or, as in some cases where a marriage is held up, do they delve into the matter.

In Pennsylvania a statute provides that all marriages shall be solemnized before twelve witnesses, but marriages not so celebrated have nevertheless been held valid.

The common law constitutes a complete marriage, in any state, but conditions, however, may be imposed by the various state legislatures.

In New Hampshire, where the statutes provide that consent and intent may solemnize marriages common law marriages without the use of minister have been held valid.

In Massachusetts, a marriage by mutual agreement, not in accordance with the statutes, has been held valid.

The prohibition of marriage with a deceased wife's sister has been abolished throughout the United States.

Marriages between cousins of first blood is forbidden in New Hampshire, Ohio, Indiana, Kansas, Nevada, Washington, North and South Dakota, Montana, Louisiana, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Nebraska, Utah and Wisconsin.

Virginia forbids the marriage of a woman with the husband of her brother's or sister's daughter.

New Jersey prohibits the marriage of any person who has been confined in a public asylum without a certificate of complete recovery signed by two physicians.

Michigan is one state in the union which prohibits the marriage of any one who has suffered from disease and has not been cured.

All our marriage and divorce laws, all our statutes on the subject, in so far as they pertain to localities embraced within the limits of particular states, are state laws, the national power with us not having legislative or judicial cognizance of the matter within those limitations. Thus it happens that one State may recognize a couple as married, whereas, if they moved to another state, they could not be married.

An attempt to force a young and beautiful girl into marriage against her will, notwithstanding fees and convention, is described in the William Fox morality play, "Who's Who's Mr. Murphy?" which will come to the Liberty Theatre, today and Monday.

Also showing a "Billie Hill Farson's" Comedy.

"WHY BOBBS DO BOB BOBS"

Patrons of the evening will have an opportunity of seeing a film version of the famous musical play, "The Belle of New York." When the picture of this same name will be presented at the Grande Theatre today only. "The Belle of New York" is presented by Select Pictures, with the beautiful Marion Davies, playing the role of the Salvation Army lass, and being famous to Edna May.

When Bobbs Gray, the inventor believes that he has sold his invention for $50,000 to a man who promises to give him $100,000. He goes to the city to study about the matter of his invention. William Brown, a young man, happens to be at the office of the man who has sold his invention. He tells Gray that he has sold his invention for $50,000 to a man who promises to give him $100,000. He goes to the city to study about the matter of his invention.
