THE CITY OF COMRADES

The City of Comrades, by Basil King, is Tom Moore's latest Hollywood picture to be seen at the Sherry theatre today and tomorrow.

It tells an absorbing story of a serious nature and presents the engaging star in what will without doubt prove the most complex role of his career. As Frank Melbury he has the opportunity to depict character development of a scope never witnessed in the silent drama. And a dozen powerful situations permeate the action of "The City of Comrades."

When Frank, emerging from a stupor, meets the girl whose home he once entered to rob, and finds that she loves him without having any knowledge of their previous encounter—the situation is tense with possibilities. Shall he remain silent to be haunted forever by the fear of recognition after they are married? Or shall he burn the past and lose her forever? The solution of this problem is characteristic of the man whose life has been changed by love.

"The City of Comrades" presents a noteworthy supporting cast, including Stella Owens, Alice B. Francis and others.

A "Smiling" Bill Parson's comedy also shown.

RESOLUTION OF CONDOLENCE

To La Grande Lodge No. 16, I. O. O. F., La Grande Oregon.

We your committee to whom was assigned the sad duty of drafting Resolution of Condolence, upon the death of our late brother, Charles E. Andrews, would respectfully submit the following:

Whereas: Another link of friendship's chain has been broken, and we are again forcibly reminded of the uncertainty of life, by the death messenger once more crossing our threshold, and removing from our ranks Brother Charles E. Andrews. Therefore be it Resolved: That it is a just and fitting tribute to his memory, to say that we mourn for one who in every way was worthy of our respect and esteem.

Resolved: That the heartfelt sympathy of this lodge, be extended to the wife and relatives of our departed brother, in their sad and sudden bereavement, and that we commend them to Him who doeth all things well.

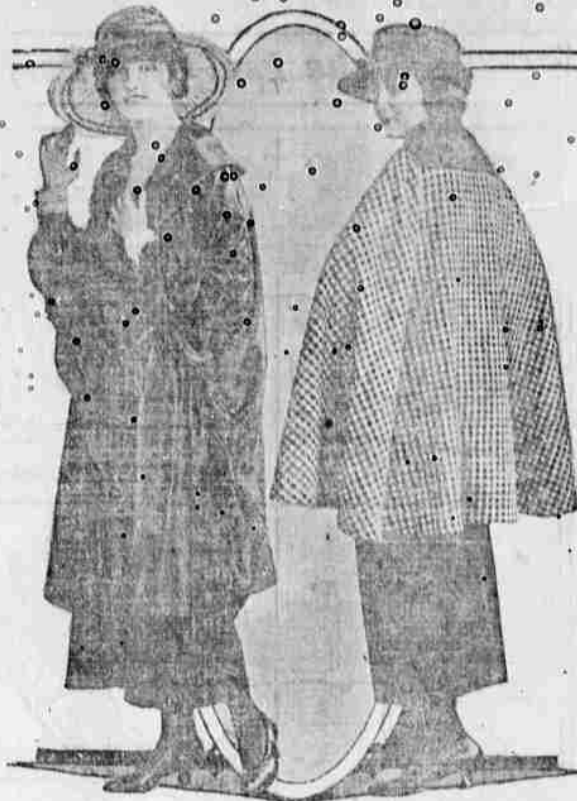

Resolved: That the Chapter of this lodge, be draped for a period of thirty days, and a copy of the resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this lodge, and a copy sent the Evening Observer, and the Pacific Odd Fellow for publication.

Eye of the Starfish. At the end of each arm in the starfish there is a little red eye. It does not form an image, but has a sensitive ability to distinguish different degrees of light, enabling the fish to become aware of distant illuminations that differs from the surrounding area.

The Story of Capes Continues

Capes and capelet wraps have taken such hold upon popular taste that designers continue to offer new models in them. It is something of a task to avoid duplicating styles and to preserve a flavor of individuality in wraps as simply constructed as the cape is, but the ingenuity of their makers keep them from being thrice so alike. There is a better chance for variety in dolmans and in combinations of cape and dolman, and an occasional model that is a cape, pure and simple, makes a success merely by contrast with these.

A cape of this kind in a black and white checked wool fabric invites study as a practical summer wrap, as shown in the picture. For young women and for misses its simplicity recommends it. It is a snappy and youthful model, with plain black satin collar and lining of gray foulard. Capes made of the lighter weight woollens are usually shorter than those of duvetyne or other heavy weaves; the cape in the picture, about three-quarter length, is a good example.

The capelet wrap with dolman sleeves, shown on the figure at the left of the picture, in a shade of black serge. It follows the favorite of the two silhouettes that have governed the designers of capes and similar wraps this season, in being very full about the body and narrowing toward the hem. The satin falls in a sort of cascade below the set-on sleeves, and a very wide shawl collar adds to the appearance of amplexity in the wrap. Little buttons at the top of the sleeve make a handsome finish, and an unusual feature of this model appears in the narrow grille of satin at the front. Every woman knows how useful a black satin wrap proves to be.

Poppies

A characteristic of the corn poppy, beside its brilliant scarlet coloring, is the large size of its two outer petals, which hide the lesser pair until the flower has opened. Poppies of European origin, be they corn poppies or other varieties, are not of the oriental species from which opium is derived. The corn poppy, when cultivated, is known as the Shirley poppy. The flower is perennial or annual, according to the variety.

Speed of Birds

The speed of birds is often overrated. The swift, for instance, has been credited with a speed of 150 miles an hour, and the popular imagination compares the flight of a sparrowhawk with that of a cannon ball. The heaviest pigeon can be relied on under fairly easy conditions to make 60 miles an hour, or considerably more.

Flowers Loved by All

Flowers seem intended for the solace of ordinary humanity; children love them; quiet contented, ordinary people love them as they grow; luxurious and disorderly people rejoice in them gathered; they are the cottager's treasure, and in the crowded town park, as with a little broken fragment of rainbow, the windows of the workers in whose hearts rests the covenant of peace.—Ruskin.
