LOVE ADVENTURE?

THEN SEE LILA LEE

IN NEW PHOTOPLAY

Do you love adventure and mysterious tales of buried treasure? Do you care for the joy of youth and the romance of the sea? If so, you will enjoy "Lila Lee." Little "Lila Lee," Lila Lee's second Paramount picture which will be displayed at the Arcade theatre tomorrow night only. It is directed by George Melford, who is responsible for "The Cruise of the Make-Believes," in which this dainty little star made her cinema debut with so much success.

In this charming photoplay, Miss Lee is the granddaughter of an old salt who is the descendant of a pirate. On his arm is tattooed a map of an island where Spanish treasure lies buried. "Bad-Eye," a villainous seaman, attempts to copy the map, but the old sailor sears his arm with fire and destroys the marks, but Patricia, the girl, has a copy which later comes in handy. The voyage is a thrilling one and naturally, the treasure is found, but nearly lost through the machinations of "Bad-Eye."

There is an intelligent orangutan in this photoplay, the animal playing a role with remarkable results. As the development of the story is concerned, the colorful character of the story, the beauty of the island scenes, the situations aboard the vessel, which is caught in a tropical storm—all form a thrilling background for the charming work of Lila Lee and her supporting company. Theodore Roberts, a veteran player, whose admirers in legion, plays the part of the old sailor, while Harrison Ford plays the part of the villain, opposite to the star. Others in the cast are Ray Oliver, Forrest Starbury, J. Parks-Jones, and Adele Farrington.
