HOW

The Paraffine Companies Inc. helped develop the oil and asphalt industry of California

The tremendous growth of the oil and asphalt industry of California was due in a measure to The Paraffine Companies, Inc.
 How?

"Black Paraffine" Apparently Worthless

In the early days, oil experts from the Pennsylvania fields, thought that the black viscous residue left after the lighter oils had been distilled from California petroleum was "black paraffine." But it was not like the paraffine they knew, and they considered it worthless.

For a long time the oil industry was handicapped by the large quantity of this black residue.

Its Great Value Discovered

Then came Beardsley, an Eastern oil expert, and Pierce, a chemist, who resolved to find a use for it. They experimented ceaselessly without result, until one day by accident they discovered that this "black paraffine" would dissolve readily in that evil-smelling liquid known as carbon bisulphide. Their search was at an end. They had made a paint which dried quickly and withstood the action of acids and alkalis.

As a result of this discovery The Paraffine Paint Company was formed to manufacture the now famous "P & B" paints and a small plant was established in Oakland in 1884.

Oil Was Distilled to Get the Asphalt

During the early life of The Paraffine Paint Company there was difficulty in securing enough "black paraffine," or what was later discovered to be asphalt. The oil companies had trouble in supplying it, because it forced them to distill a large quantity of the lighter oils in order to get the residue. And, they stated, there was little or no market for the distilled products! Thus, for a time, asphalt was the main product and the lighter oils the by-product.

ucts. A curious situation in the light of present-day conditions.

Growth of The Paraffine Paint Company

Through the Company's success in making paint, other uses for asphalt were sought and found, and it gradually extended its business. New products were brought out from time to time, such as "P & B" roofings—the original ready roofing—building papers, specialty paints and wall board, and later, floor coverings.

The Paraffine Companies, Inc. Organized

Built upon a solid foundation and a policy of high quality always, the Company grew and expanded until in November, 1917, The Paraffine Paint Company with other companies was merged into The Paraffine Companies, Incorporated. Today this organization is one of the largest industrial concerns in the West and the products of its fourteen great plants are distributed throughout various parts of the world.

Everybody on the Pacific Coast who has ever had anything to do with building construction knows the names of the "P & B" products, Malthoid and Ru-Ber-Oid Roofings, as the standards of ready roofing.
