HENS LAYING WELL NOW—GOOD ALL-YEAR LAYERS

Color of Beak and Other Parts and Condition of Comb and Abdomen. Show the Busy Bird.

OREGON AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, Corvallis, Oct. 9.—College records show that the hen that lays well through September and October is the hen that generally lays well the rest of the year, said James Dryden, chief of poultry husbandry at the college. "The records show that the medium and the poor layer in these two full months are the medium and the poor layer through the year."

A method of picking out the good layers has been developed by the experiment stations and explained for the benefit of growers. By applying the method in the two months named poultrymen can select the layers at that time, which will generally prove to be the good layers for the year.

The late moult is generally the fall layer, the early and slow moult, the non-layer. Other indications of the layer are an unt of yellow color in the beak, shanks, ear lobes and vent, and the condition of the comb and abdomen.

Hens of the yellow skin breeds that show much yellow in the parts named are not laying, or the color would have been used up in manufacture of the yolks. In layers these parts are pale.

The combs of the layers are medium to large for the breed, red, soft and warm to the touch.

The abdomen of the laying hen is rather wide, deep and flexible, with thin, well-spread pelvic bones and good distance between the pelvic and the keel bones.

"It costs about $3 a year to feed a hen now," said Professor Dryden, "and poultrymen must cull out the poor layers or go broke."

Wheat Berry Perfected. Many of the present superior wheats produced in the United States were introduced into this country from Asia, Europe and South America, and acclimated to our country while undergoing the test. They have been bred and crossed until a berry has been secured which will adapt itself to the region requiring a wheat crop.

A WANT AD will do it.
