DAYS OF '49 GRANDEST EVER

SECOND NIGHT SEES BETTER ATTENDANCE AND AMUSEMENTS.

Prizes for Man and Woman Having Most Elks' Money at Close of Show Shown Tonight.

The second night of the 'Days of '49,' the annual show given by the Elks, was even more of a success than the first night. As a whole, there is a bigger and better attendance than ever this year, the amusements are more numerous than in years hence, and all in all, it is a real live '49 show.

The man and the woman who has the most money when the Elks' show closes Saturday night at midnight, will each be awarded beautiful prizes. These prizes will be exhibited for the first time this evening.

As usual, the booths are proving as popular as ever, and dancing is always an interesting feature, to be enjoyed as one takes the desire. Local well known men furnish the amusement each evening, as criers, and so well characterized are some that their friends stop for a minute before recognizing them.

The committee which was appointed this year and which has made the show such a success are Jack Hughes, chairman; Clint Van Fleet, secretary; Charles Harding, treasurer; Nate Zweifel, Norman Desilet, C. O. Murchison, Leo Miller, Charles Binzer, Floyd Charbonneau, Lloyd Scriber, Eddie Boylan, Jimmie McLaughlin, Ray Cook, Harry Hoffman, Charles Roberts, Ed Cyr, Nolan Skiff, Claude Mackay, Claude Seranton, Frank Harris, Sam Berzender, Johnny Bourne, Jack and Willie Peare.

REMINDEES OF WAR LINE BANKS OF YSER

Much of Debris of Battle Has Been Removed, But Not All.

Correspondence of the Associated Press. DIXMUIDE, Belgium, Sept. 22.—Lining the banks of the Yser river, as far as the eye can see, are the trenches which, for so many months during the war, were occupied by the Belgian and German armies, the Belgians on the south side and the Germans on the north. They still bear many marks of shell and rifle fire, and mouldy straw lying on the damp floors still convey some idea of the hardships to which the soldiers were subjected.

On the German side of the river is a dugout, built to resist the heaviest projectiles, and cool even on a hot day. It was a favorite gathering spot for the Germans when the fighting was fiercest, but now serves the more useful purpose of a refrigerator. Instead of the bunks and chairs which once lined its sides one now sees pile upon pile of beer cases, filled with refreshment for the soldier guard at work cleaning the ground.

Behind the dugout, the bodies of three soldiers—two Belgians and one German—were buried on the bank of a tiny pond, made by bursting shells. Little crosses marking the resting places and over them poppies nod.

Along the Yser one may plainly see the effects of the hard fought struggle. Here and there the top of a dugout has been crushed in, and farther along the duckboards from an abandoned trench may be seen sticking through the mud. Within sight of the bridge, the muzzle of a field piece, rusted and useless, points to the sky.

Much of the debris of the battle-field has already been collected. Miles upon miles of barbed wire have been reclaimed from the entanglements. German and Allied, which stretched in front of the lines but at some points along the river bank the old entanglements still remain, rusted and twisted on stakes which are fast falling to the ground. There are great piles of reeled wire which has not been unwound since it left the wire mills, while the military telephone systems are still stretched upon short stakes.

The people of Dixmude, like the people of every other destroyed Belgian town, are gradually returning to the ruins of their homes. The help being given them by the government is giving them heart and strength to begin life over again. Here one may see a man patching up a shell hole in his house with a few bricks taken from the ruins of his neighbors home, and in another place men, and women too, are patching a roof.

But these instances are few. In most cases the destruction was so complete that nothing is left for the poor Belgian but to build a new house.

But the people are happy and cheerful. They go about their work with smiling faces and merry laughter. They are back home.
