GERMAN TRADE AND THE U. S.

OTTO H. KAHN OUTLINES RELATIONS IN SPEECH.

Tells Council of Foreign Relations That This Country Should Not Wait For The Treaty.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—Speaking at a dinner of the Council of Foreign Relations at the Hotel Astor Tuesday, on "Trade Relations With Germany," Otto H. Kahn said, in part:

However reluctant I am to speak of anything relating to me personally, I must ask your indulgence for a few words of a personal nature.

I am of German birth. I am not ashamed of it nor do I apologize for it or try to hide it. But from the day the first gun was fired in the summer of 1914, I did everything I could to demonstrate my bitter hostility to the hideous Prussian spirit which had brought upon the world the unspeakable calamity of that appalling war, and I did everything I could to demonstrate my unqualified espousal of the cause of the Allies, because I saw in it the cause of right and freedom.

I have never wavered in that stand. I could take none other and be true to my conceptions of duty and honor. It was not an easy stand to take for me, nor was it in the earlier stages of the war a popular one or one that promised to be on the winning side. It was for me a hard and bitter choice to make as long as America was neutral. I knew that I had much to lose by making it in the way I did, that my motives would be liable to be misunderstood and that it meant breaking forever ties and affiliations which had been dear to me.

I need not say anything about my attitude after America had thrown her sword into the scale and it had become plain to all that there was no room in the world for Americanism and Prussianism, because from that moment the attitude of all true Americans was the same.

The only reason why I have ventured to refer to my record is because I think it fairly absolves me from the imputation that what I am going to say is influenced by my German descent. I speak as an American and solely as an American. I am not of those who try to make up and seek forgetfulness for their attitude before, and in some cases after America entered the war, by loud professions of unrelenting hostility and ostentatious hatred toward the beaten foe. I am no more afraid now of the epithet "pro-German" than I was formerly of the epithet "Renegade."

Germany is crushed and in dire distress. A peace of stern and sweeping punishment, continuing on as yet in determinate sentence, has been imposed upon her. Her spirit is broken. More and more the recognition of the monstrous crime to which, under three-accused leadership, her people lent themselves, is being borne in upon them, even though I fear that some time will elapse before a full consciousness of their guilt and a genuine sense of atonement will take the place of the state of dazed confusion and bitterness of spirit, in which Germany's utter defeat and the grimly unsparring penalties assessed against her have left the nation.

What the German rulers and people have done within the recent past will stand forever among the most horrible crimes of history—perhaps as the most horrible crime. It can never be forgotten nor forgiven. But neither should this be forgotten: Here is a people, still sixty millions strong, springing from one of the great racial stocks of the earth, intelligent and efficient, naturally given to good order and to hard work, having in past times contributed much to the common stock of spiritual and material of the world. To the east of them the red flood of Bolshevism is threatening to engulf the nations.

Whether those sixty millions shall be made useful in re-equipping and normalizing a world, sadly out of gear and sorely beset by insufficient production and insufficient means of distribution; whether they shall be given hope and scope and inducement for work and rehabilitation and the preservation of the existing order of civilization and government; or whether, bereft of hope, listening to the siren of despair, they shall surrender to those who promise them salvation through chaos, depends primarily upon the actions and the attitude toward Germany, of America, and her allies in the late war. There is no time to be lost. The people of Germany are looking to the coming winter with dismal forebodings. It may be decisive for good or ill. England, with the wisdom of centuries of activity in world affairs, has taken the lead in shaping relations with Germany, impelled by both self-interest and humanity. Sir Auckland Geddes, a member of the British cabinet, in an address delivered last month, said, "The people of Germany are hopeless, dispirited, unsettled. Many men in this country are trembling before a shadow of what Germany used to be, and they will not believe what Germany is now. She is down, and I wish in my inmost heart that her trade showed some signs of elasticity, spring and development that it does, because Germany is one of our great markets and she cannot give us unless she is producing wealth within her own borders."

A French minister of state, in a recent speech, is reported as having wisely advised his compatriots to buy from Germany rather than from other countries, so as to take advantage of the depreciated state of the German exchange and because of the recon-

Live-Stock Show

Dairy Products Show Horse Show

STAGED AS ONE EXPOSITION in the new $3300,000 Pavilion at North Portland, Oregon.

Week of November 17 to 22

Open All Day and Evenings

The Pacific International Livestock exposition was inaugurated and is supported by leading bankers, business men and breeders of the Pacific Coast—men of vision who see in the Pacific Coast the livestock center of the world. The staging of this exposition on so huge a scale is a long step toward the accomplishment of this aim and the benefits of its success will be widespread.

Thousands of entries of purebred stock, many coming from the Western States, necessitated additional to the immense $300,000 Pavilion. Hundreds of educational exhibits claim your attention, including the large Western Dairy Products Show with 200 entries and daily lectures by Mr. O. E. Reed of Purdue University and Mr. M. Mortenson of the Iowa State College. Cups, Trophies and $75,000 in premiums to be awarded.

PLAN TO ATTEND THE ENTIRE WEEK.

Almost From Grower To Customer

Mr. Farmer and Produce Raiser, LOOK US UP! We buy your stuff, or sell on commission. We are looking for eatables that will reach the homes of La Grande with as little expense as possible; and by getting producer, buyer and consumer together, it's going to be a big thing, properly worked. If you have SPUDS to sell, see us. We have been supplying many homes the past few weeks. We are running out a few hundred boxes of apples this week—ask those who purchased. If you get onions, see us; don't let anything go to waste on the farm—bring it to us—we have the market, if the price is right. Eighty sacks of small spuds left, at $1.75 per Cwt. Bring your rig or auto when you come—saves the hauling. It's a big store room with nothing in it but eatables. For the right connection, PHONE BLACK 1081. Don't Buy or Sell until you see us. It's a new enterprise for La Grande.
