WHOLE COLLEGE STUDENT BODY IN HAWLEY FILM.

Making a whole college work in the pictures—that's what happened last fall in Los Angeles, California.

It all came about during the making of "The Snob," a college comedy-drama filmed by Reelart as a Wanda Hawley starring vehicle. Campus scenes were needed—and a Southern California university picked as the locale. But the collegians insisted on taking snapshots of Miss Hawley, and other prominent players in the production.

Finally Director Sam Wood called out, "If you people will all get in the scenes we'll give you fifteen minutes to snap all the pictures you want!" And so it is that the campus scenes look "real"—with actual collegians giving true and accurate atmosphere. "The Snob" will appear at the Arcade Theatre Wednesday only. It was scenarized by Alice Eyton from the William J. Neidig story in the Saturday Evening Post issue of September, 1918. It was directed by Sam Wood.

TEACHES LESSON ON DOMESTIC FEELICITY.

"So Long Letty" will open at the Sherry theatre beginning today for a run of two days. The film is a screen adaptation of the famous Oliver Morosco comedy of the same name, which for five solid years has "held" the theatre-going public of the country.

The story deals with two newly married couples who present a combination of vastly different personalities. One husband, a gay bird, has married a girl who doesn't care a fig for purple and fine linen and devotes most of her time to the preparation of excellently cooked meals and the care of her home. The other hubby, on the other hand, is a home loving chap, has placed the gold band on the hand of a sweetie who is strong for cabarets and the gay and festive life and who can't boil water without burning it.

As far as the husbands are concerned, they decide, after a conference, that a divorce is the only way out of the mess. After the divorce, each intends to marry the wife of the other. The scheme is explained to the wives who hold a conference of their own and decide to swap husbands for a week before entering the courts. Just what happens in the week following is a knockout.

Also "Movie Chats"—something new.

The Versatile Mode in Suits

The versatile mode presents us with conflicting silhouettes in suits and a variety of styles to choose from, and leaves us to pronounce our own judgment on them. The straight and the flaring box-coat seem destined to a great success; they are developed with many ingenious variations in lines and trimmings, and give a youthfulness of style that is a great asset. But the box coat has rivals that boast the charm of novelty, in suits that have rippling poplins on their coats, and in others that have the appearance of frills. A few things are assured; among them the success of the flaring coat draped on box coats, the continued use of embroidery, the vogue of slender lines and straight skirts.

Two suits very different from each other in outline, invite comparison, in the picture above. One has a straight box coat and the other a coat with a rippling poplin. The first suit will find many admirers among women who are striving to achieve the appearance of slenderness, and the other will appeal to those who must make up for a lack of curves in figures a little too slender. The woman of normal weight does not have to concern herself with these things, but only to consider which style is most becoming. The suit at the left has a high waistline and is embellished with a little embroidery matching it in color. The coat has a single fastening at the bust line in link buttons, and they form the finish for the plain coat sleeve.

The box coat employs silk brail, edged with a narrow plaiting of ribbon and bone buttons for decoration. A tie at the front of the collar provides a pretty new touch, and the sleeves are relieved from entire plainness by three buttons and buttonholes at the wrists. Neither of these suits accepts the flaring sleeve, but both adopt the straight skirt.
