Kivette In Portland

He doesn't own a single tree or a sawmill, yet W. R. Kivette, registered at the Imperial, is a mighty important factor in the lumber business in La Grande. Mr. Kivette is a lumber broker; he buys the output of a mill and disposes of it. He has been operating in the La Grande territory for about twenty years. John Kelly, in Oregonian.

Herzinger After the Business

"Shall life insurance lag during the so-called business depression? Well, I should say not," remarked E. Z. Herzinger, representative of the Oregon Life, as he handed in an advertisement to be run in the Observer until further orders. "If there ever was a time for life insurance, it is when the storms are on and the boughs of the trees sweep the ground and sing the dirge that all men hate to hear, and this applies in the business world as well," he continued.

Here On Legal Business

Al. Smith, one of the most able attorneys of Eastern Oregon, is down from Baker today attending court. He formerly represented Baker county in the lower house of the legislature and is rated as one of the best legislators who has ever sat at Salem, and this with the full knowledge that he is a Democrat. Mr. Smith refused to run for the house of representatives again owing to demands made upon his time by his increasing law business.

Man With a Hundred Boys

"Bill" Foor, who travels for a St. Louis house, is in La Grande today. Nothing very strange about Bill Foor—he never took a prize at a beauty show, does not seem to have much money, and is certainly no ladies' man, but he has something in his heart that shines as the pillar of fire by night. It is the knowledge that he has been a big brother to an even hundred boys. When he found a boy in the dumps and going to perdition, he called a halt in the young man's life, became his brother in action and the rescue work while not a hundred per cent, it is nevertheless big and aptly makes old Bill's heart swell up when he speaks of "my boys." Silent Criticism Powerful.
Criticism that says not a word counts for most. Those who effectively rebuke us and help us to better living are not they who talk freely to us about our shortcomings, but they who are quietly doing the things we are failing to do.—Exchange.
