WILL EXPEDITE MEDAL DELIVERY

WASHINGTON, D. C., Apr. 16.—To expedite the delivery of the rainbow-hued ribbons and the bronze medal that bears on its reverse face the name of our thirteen allies in the Great War For Civilization, better known as the Victory Medal, the Marine Corps has opened a new campaign of publicity through the agencies of its recruiting offices. The active recruitment of recruiting by the sea soldiers is expected speedily to clear the decks of the recruiting offices of all unused medals. The aid of the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars and posts of the Army and Navy Union have also been enlisted for this purpose. Application to the nearest Marine Corps recruiting office is all that is necessary, as the usual government red tape for the distribution of the Victory Medal has been eliminated by the Marine Corps. Each recruiting office has been issued a complete list of all officers and men who served in the war, and opposite each name is a record of all battle clasp and other devices that go with the individual medal.

USE OF MILK HAS INCREASED

This Estimate Refers Only to Whole Milk and Does not Include Cheese, Butter and Ice Creams

Forty-four gallons of milk is used by each person in the United States annually, according to estimates made by the Dairy Division of the United States Department of Agriculture. This consumption does not include that which is consumed in the form of ice cream, cheese, and butter. The amount is about twice as much as that used in 1890 when the per capita consumption was approximately 22 gallons. The dairy specialist points out that the increase in the use of milk in the last 30 years is as great as that in the preceding 250 years.

The present day consumption of milk in the United States, they say, is equal to about one pint per day, or as much as two small glasses. That is a great amount when it is known that it includes not only the milk that is used for drinking, but also that for cooking. This is a small amount compared to the per capita consumption in some European countries. In Sweden and in Switzerland, for example, nearly 70 gallons are used by each person annually.

Ancient Tribes Lived on Milk. A high value has always been placed on cows in many European countries, and history records a campaign conducted by Julius Caesar in central Europe where he found German tribes living almost exclusively on milk. In order to provide pastures for their cows they forcibly resisted the settlement of any people near them.

In relating the growth of the dairy industry in this country, the department specialists say that in pioneer days each family kept its own cow. The denser the population became the more important it was to have a well regulated and ample commercial supply of milk. Gradually the number of cows increased, and in time a dairy business grew up in various sections. The development of modern methods in the distribution of milk, with sanitary and economic hauling, has been closely accompanied by the larger use of this food, they say.

Much of the milk now used in cities comes many miles, and recently improved methods have made it possible to ship it for long distances in refrigerator cars. At the National Dairy Show in Chicago in 1919, milk shipped from the Pacific Coast took first prize in the market milk competition with the highest score ever given to milk in recent years.

Cities have always used a smaller amount of milk in proportion to the number of people than general farming communities, the statistics show. For example, Philadelphia reached the rate of 23 gallons per capita in 1905, which was 15 years later than the country at large reached a consumption of 22 gallons. There are, however, many agricultural and non-agricultural rural districts where cows are not kept and where modern methods of milk distribution are not equal to most cities. The people in such places have to depend on canned milk of various kinds, and this, the dairymen say, is an exceedingly valuable means of supplying a need which 20 or 30 years ago could not have been supplied at all.
