COLOMBIAN TROUBLE IS ONE OF MANY

Colombia, "arranged" the Panama revolution in some way and put the deal through with Panama. The treaty opponents contended that the ratification of the present treaty would stain those contentions which they denied and place a stain on the memory of President Roosevelt.

The strange shifts that often occur in political tides find an illustration in the history of the treaty. It was negotiated at the instance of William Jennings Bryan, a Democratic secretary of state, submitted by a Democratic President Woodrow Wilson, blocked in ratification by a Republican minority, recommended for ratification by a Republican president, Warren G. Harding, and urged by leaders of a Senate predominantly Republican. The treaty as finally drawn, however, differs from that signed at Bogota on April 6, 1914 and placed before the Senate by President Wilson on June 16, 1914, the principal change being the elimination of a paragraph whereby the United States would have expressed its regret to Colombia for the loss of Panama.

U. S. Must Pay Gold.
The purpose of the treaty as expressed in its preamble is "to restore the cordial friendship that formerly characterized the relations between the two countries and also to define and regulate their rights and interests in respect of the inter-oceanic canal which the government of the United States has constructed across the Isthmus of Panama."

Article One provides that the treatment accorded citizens and products of Colombia in transportation through the Panama Canal and over the Panama Railway shall be equal to that given citizens and products of the United States.

Article Two obligates the United States to pay to Colombia $25,000,000 gold, $5,000,000 within six months after the exchange of ratifications and $5,000,000 annually for four years.

Article Three obligates Colombia to recognize Panama as an independent state, defines the boundary between Colombia and Panama and obligates the United States to use its good offices to obtain the establishment of diplomatic relations between Colombia and Panama and to bring about the adjustment of questions of pecuniary liability between the two countries.

The concluding Article provides for the exchange of ratifications in Bogota, the Colombia capital, "as soon as may be possible."

Couldn't Be Poorer Without It.
Jed Tankins says he never went into politics because he'd want to leave politics poorer than when he entered it and he couldn't find anybody to give him credit.

Y. M. C. A. Finds Few Jobs
At the Y. M. C. A. it was stated that about 10 men a day apply for work. No calls have been received for men from contractors by J. L. Cramer, secretary, but he states that a number of farmers have called for men and that a number of temporary jobs have been filled around town.

No accurate estimate can be made of the number of men in La Grande who are out of work and able and willing to take road jobs. However, it appears that there are about 200, most of whom have drifted in here because of the reports that road work was starting. The railroad men who are out of work, are in many cases, men who have saved some money and expect to be put back to work soon, expecting the business of the railroad to increase again soon.
