THE HOME GARDEN

What is Home without a Garden?

Making the Garden Getaway.

Trot out the seed lists and dig out the seed boxes and flats.

That little 2 by 4 box in the window is the making of a big garden patch outside. Start lettuce, for the early crop of large, crisp solid heads. Get tomatoes, egg plants, and peppers going for the early crop. If you are going to raise some big onions start a box of onions from seed—that's the only way you can get them.

Put in a few seeds of early cabbage and cauliflower. If you get a hotbed ready last fall, you can get ready to start operations by accumulating a pile of fresh stable manure for it, and gently turning it to start it, heating and fermenting evenly before you put it in the bed for the seeds.

All these early seeds ought to be in as early as possible if you want to have a first-class garden and get the benefit of it for the longest time. It is the only way possible to get early head lettuce, and in a majority of cases, any head lettuce at all, for the big heads will form only during the cool months.

Study the seed catalogues for quality. Each year something a little better than last year's offering is likely to appear in some of the lists. Select only standard varieties known to be the best. Each seedsman can tell you. Buy, whenever possible, only varieties of vegetable known to succeed in your neighborhood. Inquire of your neighbors what kinds they had best success with, and add it to your own experience. Whose tomatoes were the best last summer? What kind of tomato was it? Try it out yourself.

Try some other variety and see if it won't prove even better. There is great variation in the size and shape of tomatoes.

This is the time to get busy. An early start is half the garden.

The Herb Garden

There is no more practical use for a tiny patch of ground than to make of it a herb garden, a patch of taste and smell to gladden the soul. The great secret of foreign cooking and a department in which the American cook is too often lacking in flavoring, particularly for soups. The French or Italian chef uses quantities of herbs, dried or fresh, often to add tang or zest to a vegetable which has no very pronounced flavor of its own.

Stuffing for fowls is dependent for its palatableness upon the herbs which flavor it. Three or four herbs enter into some of these dressings an accomplished chef will turn out.

Only a few plants are needed of each herb. It is a great convenience to have them handy in the kitchen, for when they are needed they are needed badly. A fresh home-grown supply is worth double the dried product obtainable from the grocery store.

Sweet basil, a favorite of French cooks for soups, stews, dressings and sauces; marjoram, used for the same purpose; hyssop, often used in combination with basil and marjoram or alone or with sage; chervil, a flavoring akin to parsley; dill, to keep the lamb from being lonely and to cook with green peas or to make into jelly (no longer for juleps); summer savory to flavor soup or stews or to cook with string beans; sage, the inevitable herb of the Thanksgiving turkey, and if worse comes to worse, usable as a hair dye; annual lavender, the dried blossoms of which make scented bags to be placed among the linen for the dainty fresh fragrance it imparts; a few plants of dill or the pickles; all these in small spaces may be grown readily, and all except the thyme will grow from seed. The leaves may be dried and put away in cans, boxes or paper sacks and some housewives merely cut down the whole plant and hang it to dry, protecting it from dust.

A few plants of tarragon will furnish leaves for flavoring the salad vinegar and the aromatic herb is also used in cookery.
