What Smart Women Wear

Lavish Use of Embroidery on Frocks
—Hats of the Moment.

You realize by this time, don't you, that embroidery is one of the most prominent features of the season's clothes? At every smart gathering, in restaurant and theatre, the best dressed women are those wearing embroidered frocks of some sort or other.

To meet this demand the shops are showing materials embroidered by machinery. It has a harsh sound, "by machinery," but the words are not descriptive of the actual thing. For the embroideries have been so perfected that they are just as lovely and effective, as if done by hand. And do not imagine that they are much less than hand embroidery in price, when all is said and done.

A Paris model wrap and frock that belong together, in dark brown velveteen with embroidery in wheels of tan and brown silk braid. The hat is of brown and silver brocade ribbon with brown Paradise.

You may have material embroidered all over or you may have it with only an embroidered border. You may select a plain skirt, and an embroidered blouse, or vice versa, but there must be some embroidery somewhere! Whether the frock be of silk or wool, embroidery can be effectively used, and that embroidery may be done with colored wools or silks, or with gold and silver and bronze tinsel. I distinctly remember one little serge daytime frock which struck me as being ultra smart. It had eyelet holes embroidered in silver thread wherever the eye could see.

Today's sketch shows my last pet costume, a frock with its companion wrap, which employs embroidery in a novel way. The cloak-wrap is of very dark brown velveteen in a soft, supple quality, as is the lower part of the skirt. Attached to the latter is an upper part of heavy silk jersey in tan and the two tones of the tan and brown are lined together by the embroidery on the wrap and frock—embroidery in the pattern of large wheels made from tan and brown silk braids. When the cloak is thrown back the embroidery forms a continuous path across the front of the figure, thus heightening its effectiveness.

The hat for this costume is a turban in brown and silver brocade with brown Paradise branching from it in the horn-like fashion that is so popular this season. Note it particularly. Many dress hats, both large and small, feature Paradise, placed on the hats in this dashing manner. Those dress hats that do not carry Paradise are plumed with ostrich, and for the present these two types of trimming prevail.

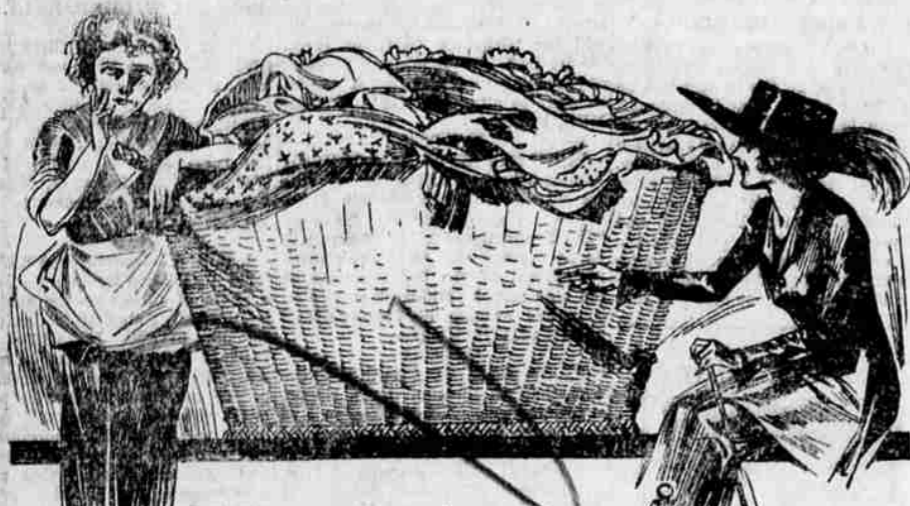

The Petit shapau of the moment a white taffeta turban with black lace frill

A NEW TURBAN

The second sketch shows a little hat also very popular at the moment, but intended rather for street wear, than for dressy occasions. It is a turban of taffeta with a frill of lace, whose upper edge starts about midway of the crown, the lower falling slightly over the forehead and further down at the sides and back. This particular trick of placing the lace frill is of advantage to those women who do not like to go on the street without a veil, even though the face might be framed in a lace frill. Underneath the frill a fine mesh face veil can be worn without detracting from the effect. Black or brown lace frills are used over white taffeta, or the hats may be all black or all black.

May Achieve Goodness
While tenderness of feeling, susceptibility to generous emotions are accidents of temperament, goodness is an achievement of the will and a quality of the life.—Lowell.
