Kilbane "Dissects" Wallops He Says Jersey Will See

BY JOHNNY KILBANE,
Featherweight Champion

Jack Dempsey, bigger and heavier than Carpentier, undoubtedly will open his fight against the Frenchman July 2nd by driving for the body. He will try to inflict punishment there to loosen Carpentier's guard.

so that he can break through with the stow-away left to the chin. Georges, on the other hand, speedier and shifter than Dempsey, will lay for Jack's chin.

What will the effect be? There are really only three vulnerable spots on a man's body where a blow has telling effect. These are the jaw, the pit of the stomach and the heart.

To Reach the Jaw.

Either a right cross or a left hook can be used in reaching the jaw. Properly landed the blow paralyzes the nerve centers that lead to the brain and the victim is rendered unconscious immediately. It's the best kind of a knockout punch because a man who gets it can't come back before the 10 seconds have expired. A straight right or either a right or left uppercut are the blows used in reaching the pit of an adversary's stomach. A punch here takes the wind, and while it floors an opponent as quickly as a punch to the jaw, it is not as effective. The victim's brain is as clear as ever and the chances are that he will recover his wind in time to regain his feet before he is counted out.

The Heart Blow.

A straight right, which is the only blow that gets to the heart, has the same wind-taking effect that the punch to the stomach has. In addition, it shakes the entire nervous system and is one of the best blows for shaking a fighter's courage. It literally "takes the heart out of him" if it is landed with smart behind it.

Probably the most essential punch of all among the four or five that comprise the complete list of boxing blows is the straight left jab. It inflicts little punishment, but the boxer relies on it as a "set-up punch." By this I mean that he jabs to make his opponent block and to "locky" him around into position for a try for a knockout. For it is only after a man has been "set up" for a knockout that the blow, 9 times out of 10, can be delivered.

Center or Few Blows.

Few fighters, even the best known in the ring, really know how to use more than three blows. Dempsey for example has an excellent right cross and a good left hook, but he has no jab. Benny Leonard carries a jab on two punches, but is not a one-punch fighter like Dempsey. His wallops don't lay a man low, yet they are forceful enough to keep an opponent's brain in a whirl so that he can't concentrate on the fight. Jack Britton has a good left, but little else. Carpentier relies principally on a one-two punch, although he may have some additions to his repertoire now. Speed, of course, will be a big help to Georges in the Dempsey go.

With Jack hammering at Carpentier's stomach and Georges aiming at Jack's chin the outcome of the fight is going to depend largely on which is the first to land a blow.

REPUTATION WEEK.

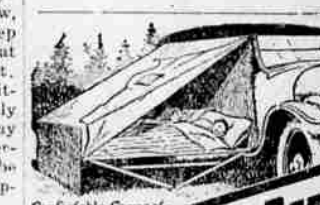

Johnny Kilbane here illustrates the blows he says Dempsey and Carpentier will use in seeking each other's vulnerable spots. Above, a left jab to the jaw; next, a right to the jaw; below, a right to the heart.

Going Some.
When a soda water man draws so much soda water in a day that it clogs his hand you will know that he has been drawing SOME soda water and that is just what Al Cain did Friday, and he is a tender boy either. He says the Palace Berkeley Ice Cream, for real delicious flavor and purity of real cream, is a great winner at his fountain.
