

KILBANE EXPLAINS PLAN OF BATTLE FOR JERSEY CITY

BY JOHNNY KILBANE

Featherweight Champion. What will be Jack Dempsey's plan of battle in his fight with Georges Carpentier?

That is a question that has been asked and will be asked many times. It is a hard one to answer, as plans laid before a fight, especially one of this importance, are generally knocked to pieces before the men have gone very far.

Plans of battle are usually laid, or rather made, by one opponent for the other. That is, each must adapt himself to the other's offense and defense when the battle is actually on.

It is idle to say before the men step into the ring that Dempsey will do this and that, or that Carpentier will do so and otherwise. Of course, each has his particular style, or specialty, but circumstances very often alter styles.

How Others Fought

Joe Gans was a consistent counter-fighter. Terry McGovern rubbed his head down and tried to batter his men down with sheer strength and speed of attack. Jim Corbett hooked and jabbed with his left and did much footwork. Jeffries crouches, boxes cautiously and when the opportunity presented itself did most of his work with a natural left to head or body. Willie Ritchie favored a right to the body and a straight line (not a right cross) to the chin, and so on down the line.

Having my belief on what I have seen Dempsey and Carpentier do in action, I believe that Dempsey will rely largely on getting inside, hammering the body with his right and then bringing the left over to the head. I do not see how he can afford to go otherwise. The Champion fights from side to side, while Carpentier steps in and out, using a fast one-two.

Jack Must Fight

If Carpentier does not vary from his style, Dempsey would be foolish to stand off and attempt to box with the Frenchman. He could not catch him with such tactics, his opponent being too fast and smart at this sort of game. A little pullback and Dempsey would miss, leaving him open for a fine counter.

In his fight with Willard the present champion's first punch was a right smash under the heart, following a fraction of a second later with a sort of lifted left half hook to the jaw, which sent Big Jess over for the first knockdown. That is what I expect Dempsey to attempt to do the moment the bell sends them away.

Will Let Jack Lead

What Carpentier will try when he starts also is hard to predict. I believe that he will permit Dempsey to do all the starting, that he will be cautious to the point of creating the belief that he is not much in love with the issue—a little bit afraid, to be perfectly plain and frank.

Speed of hand and foot he undoubtedly has, and as they are his principal assets, unless he has developed something of which we know nothing at this time, they must be his principal stock in trade, with the style of fighting as we have known it when he starts to go.

JOSH WISE ON THE FIGHT

BY JACK RAPER

A Word From Josh Wise: Jack Johnson says he is trainin' hard every day. But I guess he ain't doin' any road work.

Dempsey announces that Carpentier will spend only two hours a day in training. That's a little better than Jess Willard did. Jess used to work up a sweat by rocking himself in a chair on the front porch, and built up his wind by riding in an automobile.

The Frenchman spent part of his first day in camp reading a scrapbook. Prizefighters are especially fond of scrap books.

Fight experts believe Carpentier will play the hit and run game. Most of the fellows who have faced Dempsey have played the get hit and drop game.

Carpentier speaks only a few English words. But he understands plenty when it talks.

The sport eds say Dempsey is as brown as a nut. The world is full of nuts. What kind do they mean?

The artist lives, frog's head to mouth, the prizefighter from head to jaw.

Dempsey is doing a lot of rope work in his training. The most famous in this country are their rope work are Jimmie and Jack Lynch.

A champion never has a long losing streak. He loses once and that's the end of him.

Governor Edwards wrote to the ministers of London, N. Y., that this is not to be a prize fight, but a legalized scientific exhibition of boxing. If the governor is serious, the truth nobody will pay to look at it.

Dempsey is being besieged by men who want his autograph. Most of the prizefighters have known could reduce a pound by writing their names on it.

Only 500 persons were on hand to greet Carpentier when he landed. How do you account for the lack of interest? Why more than that many greeted Pershing?

STATE FAIR WILL

HAVE NEW MACHINERY

HALL FOR THIS YEAR

SALEM, June 16.—Decision to erect another machinery pavilion at the state fair grounds here was reached by the fair board at a meeting here Monday afternoon. The new pavilion will be an exact duplicate of the one just completed at a cost of approximately $20,000. The board decided to make the horse show a feature of the fair again this year. Plans were also made for visiting the various counties in the state in the interest of county exhibits at the state fair which will open this year on September 26 and close on October 1.
