Venus' Brilliance A Splendor—
If any Observer reader will set his alarm clock for an hour that will just precede dawn, and then, if it's a clear morning, he may witness one of the grand sights of the heavens. Venus is nearer to earth now than it will be for seven years again, and those who have had the interest to get up two hours before sun-up, will see the heavens lighted with a brilliancy that is almost equal to a full-orbit moon. It is gradually receding now and will soon offer no unusual brilliancy even at this early hour of the day.

Extended Motor Trip—
On the morning of June second Mr. and Mrs. W. I. Pearson and son, Raymond, of Fort Hancock, New Jersey, started on a motor trip to the Pacific coast.
