VALE HAS BIG WATER STORAGE

VALE, Aug. 22.—With the irrigation season approximately over there is a surplus storage of 125,000 acre feet of water in the Warapings Irrigation District reservoir at Riverside according to the last reading sent to the central office at Vale.

This means, say project officials, practically two years irrigation water is already stored, but in order to reduce the spillway runover next year the gates will be left open for several weeks and the storage reduced considerably.

The water gauges show the heaviest run ever this year of any year since 1919, and while the last of the year Watermaster H. G. Kennard estimates that the run over will be approximately as big this year as it was in 1919.

The records show the years of 1904, 1907, 1908 and 1919 to be the heavy precipitation years during the past twenty years in this district. In 1904 approximately 125,000 acre feet of water more than the storage capacity of 170,000 acre feet of the big reservoir passed down the river. In 1907, the spillway run over was 100,000 acre feet; in 1908 was 62,000 acre feet; in 1917, 70,000 acre feet, and in 1919, 117,000 acre feet. This year it will be somewhere between 70,000 and 100,000 acre feet.
