LAKE PICTURE HAS A DRAMATIC PLOT

As entralling a picture as has been seen in a long time is "Uncharted Seas," the Metro special which comes to the Sherry theatre today for a run of two days. Alice Lake, known wherever pictures are enjoyed, has the leading role, and gives a dramatic interpretation unexcelled for beauty and force, according to reports from critics who have seen this picture elsewhere.

It is "entralling" because of this unusual plot and the method of working out the situations is consummate. Briefly, the story deals with Lucetta Eastman, whose husband is a moral dervish, addicted to opium and loose women. Lucetta's cup of disgust brings over at last, but Tom's father entreats her to give him one last chance. The test is the finding of a deserted steamship, loaded with ten million of Klondike gold. Tom is given a seaworthy craft, and a rotating vessel, manned with desperadoes is foisted on Frank Underwood, who loves Lucetta and is loved by her. The cowardice of the one, and the courage of the other, as they go through Behring Straits leads to the heart-clutching climax.

The next to the last chapter of "Lightning Bryce" is also being shown.

CHAPLIN PROVES GOOD "MOTHER" TO THE KID

Star vs. story has been a real live issue for many years in the motion picture industry, many producers holding to the theory that the public will pay to see actors or actresses rather than go to see a production of real interest played by an unknown cast. It has been a drawn question between the two factions for some time, because each has perfectly good grounds to offer as to why one or the other policy is the best.

The whole question, however, was raised anew with the release of "The Kid," the six-reel Charlie Chaplin production for Associated First National Pictures, Inc. Charlie Chaplin had always been the shining example of those who supported the star system. They pointed out, and rightly, that he had attained a popularity unequalled by any other screen star through the medium of productions which lacked stories entirely; or if one was present it was the flimsiest sort of a frame work, merely to support the comedian in now comic stunts.

With the release of "The Kid," which will be the attraction at the Arcade theatre beginning today, the supporters of the theory that stories are the main requisite of successful pictures, receive entirely unlooked for aid, because "The Kid" is a dramatic story as has ever been produced in a motion picture.

Charlie is there with the same make-up and the same characteristics that have made him the famous comedian in the world. But the film does not revolve around Chaplin; it concerns a foundling baby, its growth to boyhood, and his final coming into his birthright. Charlie's part is that of foster father to the boy, and in the role he commits the most delightful humor and ludicrous comedy that he has ever given the screen. But there are no shifts away from the plot to give him a chance merely to do some new trick. Every laugh—and the story teems with them—is caused by a step onward in the career of the Kid.

While supporters of the story hall "The Kid" as a sign of the conversion of the comedian to the story, friends of Mr. Chaplin know that for many years he bewailed the fact that the public would not let him play dramatic stories. To produce "The Kid" he voluntarily relinquished work on a contract paying him $1,000,000 a year in order to devote his time to the production, the story which he wrote himself. The fact that it took him nearly a year to make it runs the money cost up, in figuring what he might have earned, to a freightful extent, but to the comedian it is a justification of the idea that, given the role, even a clown can be human in a logical way.
