animals, pets of "Mitt Dale," which are owned and managed by Charles Murphy. For the first time in history the mountain lion, hitherto considered absolutely unmanageable, really acts a part on the screen. Then there is a big grizzly and a dog, both accomplished animal actors, who will amaze you with their intelligence.

EUGENE O'BRIEN AT THE ARCADE SUNDAY

In "Is Life Worth Living?" in which Eugene O'Brien, popular Selznick screen star, is scheduled to appear at the Arcade theatre Sunday only readers of the Saturday Evening Post will recognize a story which appeared in that widely circulated publication not many months ago under the title of "The Open Door". The story is from the pen of George Weston, whose contributions are to be found in the Post and other magazines with great regularity from time to time.

In some respects "Is Life Worth Living?" is quite a departure from the average of photoplay narratives. A whimsical blending of laughs and tears, it might be called a serio-comic screen production. Its serious thoughts have to do with the injustices which are sometimes visited upon the innocent by laws which can acquit but cannot always vindicate. Its delicate humor comes from the representation of the little, inconsequential, but nevertheless strikingly effective things which the laws of the Universe bring forth to bolster up such failing spirit in order that the average of happiness and success may be achieved.

Eugene O'Brien, in the leading role of a typical young American office employee, has a part so human that its appeal is as wide as the scope of any community of theatre-goers. Winifred Westover and Arthur Housman appear in leading support of the star.

Keep Your Eye On Al. Now watch Al Cain at the Palace. He says he has discovered how he can get away with a thousand pounds of sugar every Saturday and not realize it until he finds out it has all been

"Before the White Man Came" was directed by John E. Maple, who deserves great credit for the excellent production he turned out in the face of many obstacles. It can be readily imagined that directing a picture with a cast of players who have never even seen a moving picture camera before and who are unable to understand a single word you say is no easy matter. Still this is just what Mr. Maple did. He states that it was not so hard as it might seem for he had the service of an interpreter and the story being part of the history of the tribe was familiar to all concerned. Knowing the story as they did it was an easy matter to get them to react it before the camera once they were made to understand that they were preserving one of the legends of their tribe for future generations.

The picture, from its interest as a story has a distinct educational value as a record of the manners and customs of a fast vanishing race. Two comedies are also being shown. Wallace Reid tomorrow.

ZANE GREY'S "MAN OF THE FOREST" AT THE STAR

"The Man of the Forest" is a Benjamin B. Hampton photoplay of a Zane Grey novel—that's about all that need to be said about the motion picture which is today's and Sunday's featured attraction at the Star theatre. Everyone knows those two masters, and what a wonderful combination a Ben Hampton photoplay and a Zane Grey novel make. Everyone has read "The Man of the Forest," which is one of the latest of Zane Grey's best sellers. But dare we tell you that this is a little the best that has come from that notable combination yet? That means a wonderful entertainment for you!

Carl Gantvoort, famous light opera baritone and former leading man for those footlight idols, Mitzl Hajos, Christine Macdonald and Hazel Dawn, takes the title role in "The Man of the Forest" as his third screen trial, after making great "hits" in the two preceding films. He plays "Mitt Dale," the man of the forest, a keen-eyed, virile, deep-chested outdoorsman, whose love of nature prompts him to live in the wild forests of the Arizona mountains and to keep as pets a big mountain lion and a grizzly bear, besides his dog.

Claire Adams, the beautiful young actress who is attaining much prominence lately by her splendid work plays the leading feminine role. Others in the cast include Charlotte Pierce, Robert McKim, Jean Herbold and last but not least are the
