BOOKMAKERS STILL AT IT

LONDON, Nov. 29. — Despite the recent betting by check case in the House of Lords, whereby the recovery of bets paid by check was made possible, bookmakers here do not anticipate many applications for the return of their money or that many complications will ensue as a result of the decision.

An agitation has recently been started with the object of legalizing the system of betting by check and the National Sporting League, to which practically all bookmakers are affiliated, has made arrangements with two prominent members of parliament to introduce in the House of Commons a short bill on that subject. A bill with the object in view has already been introduced to the House of Lords.

The judgment that a bet paid by check can be recovered by the man who pays it came at first as a bombshell to the gambling fraternity but, in the light of subsequent happenings, it has appeared to them to be a blessing in disguise inasmuch as it has shown up what they regard as the many anomalies which exist under the present betting laws of Great Britain. The Lord Chancellor (Lord Birkenhead) when he was delivering judgment in the case referred to said he would support any bill to revise the gaming act.

The position at present is that the government allows betting under certain conditions. A person desirous of placing a bet must not hand a slip of paper with the bet thereon to a bookmaker in the street or any public place, but he may put the same words on a government telegraph form and send it over the government wires at the usual tariff without fear of being arrested.

It may be sent to the bookmaker's office by letter or by telephone and the sender will still be on the safe side. On the other hand the bookmaker may not take any hard cash in his office, but a bookmaker standing on the race course can take any money out to any punter without restriction.

NEW MAYO FILM HAS MANY THRILLS

A huge liner burning to the water's edge in mid-ocean, and then swallowed by the waves; a tropic hurricane which lashes a schooner and threatens its destruction; a mutiny at sea; a terrific fight between the master of a ship and a score of fear-crazed Lascars and Kanakas; a tiny babe tossed on the waves supported by a bit of wreckage; a leap from a high cliff into the shark-infested waters of the South Pacific—these are but a few of the outstanding features of "The Shark Master," the romance of the South Seas, in which Frank Mayo is to be seen at the Arcade Theatre on Wednesday and Thursday.

Frank Mayo has a somewhat different role in "The Shark Master," but one which permits him to exercise both his histrionic skill and his twofisted ability. His leading lady is May Collins in the role of The Flame Flower, while other important roles are portrayed by Doris Deane, Herbert Fortier, "Smoke" Turner, Nick DeRuiz, Oliver Cross and Carl Silvers.

The Angora club of Astoria claims to be the state forester that a mile of trail leading to Saddle mountain has been completely destroyed by logging operations.
