Union's Trademark—
Tony D. Smith of Union is at the Imperial. Union some time ago joined the ranks of the Oregon cities that have high-class hotels. The building of such a hotel at Union was a demonstration of community spirit, for it was recognized that it might not pay very large dividends for some time, but the citizens realized that with a good hotel tourists would stop overnight and would send others there and thus help build up their community.—Oregon Journal.

Newspaper Rates High—
Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Cameron left this morning for Portland, after visiting for quite awhile with his father, Alexander Cameron, sisters, Mrs. Hector McDonald and Mrs. Charles Hood, postmistress of Wallawa, and his brother, George Cameron at Wallawa. They are en route to Alaska and will stop at Portland before returning. Mr. and Mrs. Cameron make their home in Ophir, Alaska, a place 12 miles from a postoffice. Mail service during the winter is very uncertain, dog sleds being used to transport the mail and in the summer the carrier generally walks over his route. He is in the mining business at Ophir and has lived in Alaska over 25 years. The last time he was in La Grande was 40 years ago and the city was all on the hill, that part now being known as Old Town. "People living here are getting things for practically nothing," says Mr. Cameron, "at Ophir I pay 25 cents for sugar, $1.10 per pound for bacon, butter is $1.25 per pound and the last potatoes I bought cost me $27 for 100 pounds. And I take the Kus-kowin Times, a six by eight inch single sheet, weekly paper and pay $24 for a year's subscription." Mr. Cameron reports a very pleasant trip while in the States and was pleased to see his relatives and renew acquaintance with old friends again.

FORESTS ARE BIG MEAT PRODUCERS

PORTLAND, Jan. 10.—Through its issuance of paid grazing permits to stockmen of Oregon and Washington the Forest Service of the U. S. Department of Agriculture not only secures for the government a considerable sum of money, but it transforms into a marketable product weeds and grass that would otherwise be lost. In addition grazing reduces the fire hazards in the forests by removing the annual growth which would otherwise mature and become highly inflammable and might mean the loss of valuable timber. This statement was made by E. N. Kavanagh, chief of the office of grazing for the North Pacific district of the Forest Service, in reviewing the results of the past grazing season.

"Campers and tourists summering in the high mountain country of the two states may see bands of cattle and scattered bunches of sheep and often do not realize that the owners of this livestock are not only paying Uncle Sam for the privilege of utilizing this government forage but are hereby helping produce a meat and wool supply for the people of the Pacific Northwest," said Mr. Kavanagh.

"The National Forest reserves are made use of by a great many different people," said Mr. Kavanagh, "a large number of stockmen depend on them for their summer range, many lumbermen look to the forests for their timber supply, water power is being developed there and more, and the summer camper considers the National Forests as his vacation land, and all these various uses of the National Forest must be harmonized by the Forest Service. The national forest are really large enough and are so diversified as to allow room for all of these apparently conflicting uses."

In one year, it estimated, the 22 national forests of Oregon and Washington turn out approximately 6,000,000 pounds of lamb and 4,000,000 pounds of mutton. Over 54,000,000 pounds of beef are annually produced in part on the National Forests of Oregon and Washington, and over 8,000,000 pounds of wool get its first and most important growth while the sheep are on the National Forests. The 1,400,000 head of sheep and cattle that move into the forests every spring are drawn from a wide area of surrounding territory, and in the fall the lambs and older sheep move to the eastern markets, principally to Chicago, while the best stock for the most part comes into Portland.

Among the many improvements and new enterprises outlined for Jacksonville in the near future is the old U. S. hotel, which is soon to pass into the hands of experienced hotel people.
