

Age does not come with the glare of trumpets. It creeps along on velvet slippers—and we are old before we know it.

THE woman who carelessly accepts her graceful slenderness as a permanent gift of the gods is suddenly amazed to find that a few added years have brought unpleasant figure tendencies that accentuate her age and betray the smooth beauty of carefully preserved hair and face.

Nature needs help at any age—and just the right wisp of a corner worn in youth is a protection against the discouraging task of attempting to regain her figure lines in later life. Good lines are far easier to retain than to regain.

How fares it with Christianity after nineteen hundred years incredible in the multitude of things which have taken place in the thought of man and in the tumult of ideas? Has its arm become palsied? Has its tongue become hoarse? Have its steps begun to falter? We live in a new world as far as political and social conditions are concerned. We live in an age in which new ideas have become revolutionary. How is all this affecting Christianity? These questions will be answered in the sermon Sunday forenoon. If you find it difficult to adjust your religious views to newly discovered facts, you will be interested. Church school at 9:45. A good place to spend an hour. H. Hesser, superintendent. BELIEVE IN SILENCE POWER

By Associated Press. RICHMOND, Ind., Jan. 13.—On the background of an experience of more than 250 years, during which the Quaker church has relied upon "silent waiting before God" as the source of spiritual discernment, its members, known as the Friends, today still believe in the power of silence. Walter C. Woodward, general secretary of the Five Years Meeting of Friends in America and editor of the American Friend, in a statement issued here today said this religious group still believes that the world may be purified and strengthened through the power of a living silence. "From the constant clash and confusion which distract it," he said, "the world must retire to the inner chamber of the unseen reality of the spirit, if peace and good will are to become permanent. The world is now stirred as never before with aspirations for world brotherhood. To become fruitful, these aspirations must be based upon the will of peace. The attainment of this will is primarily a spiritual, rather than an intellectual process. It must come through spiritual communion with God, and through Him, with man, the brother. Herein is the power of silence, through which we may become in tune with the infinite. This is not the silence of seclusion which would lead one from life's responsibilities to the introspection of the monastic cell. It is what Friends term a living silence through which men may become spiritually energized for the great tasks of human betterment. "Spiritual things cannot be discerned without quiet meditation," the western world is reminded by Sadhu Sundar Singh, the Hindu seer. That American churches are coming to recognize this fundamental principle is illustrated by the clarion call for "spaces of silence" made by the Churchman, organ of the Episcopal church of America. At a time when the soul of America is being stirred to meet the need of the world, Friends say it for all friends of peace and good will.

Pure Anglo-Saxon Word. One use of the word "wokin" in modern English is the phrase "to be wokin' since." The word is a good middle English one for sky or clouds; it is more commonly spelled welkin. The Anglo-Saxon word was "wintan." There is supposed to be a connection between "wokin" and Anglo-Saxon "wintan" in roll, but this has not been proved.
