OLD MINE IS REDISCOVERED

BAKER, Jan. 27.—In 1860 croppings of what indicated a valuable mine were found by prospectors in their stampede for the rich placers in the Greenhorn mountains, in the district near Mt. Lookout, towards Snake river. These miners went to the Greenhorn district and later returned to develop their croppings but these were never discovered. Literally hundreds of prospectors since have covered the district to find the mine but none were successful.

The mine has been found. It was discovered last September by George Jennings, superintendent at the Delaware mine, and his father, P. J. Jennings, an old time miner and prospector. They continued development.

The strike was made in what has since been called the Lost Trail group, three miles northeast of Mt. Lookout near the summit in Baker county. It is heralded by mining men as one of the best that has been discovered in 40 years. The reason for the failure of the many miners who searched for it to find it is understood to be that the rain and snow had washed down the debris of the mountains and covered the ledge.

Development work has been carried on quite extensively for the last several months. There are five claims located. A shaft has been sunk on No. 1 claim, the ledge being seven feet wide; four feet of which is clean ore that assays from eighty ounces to 140 ounces in silver and averages 510 in gold.

A tunnel has been started on No. 2 claim. The Surprise and J. D. claims are located on a cross vein, a shaft having been sunk down on this ledge 65 feet and ore all the way. Some of this ore runs as high as $200 per ton in gold.

George Jennings is superintendent of the Delaware Mining company, whose mine, the Delaware, is located a mile below on the north fork of Manning creek. This property was equipped with powder and machines drills last August. Seven hundred feet of tunnel has been driven, cutting two ore shoots and a raise has been run through to the surface blocking out a large tonnage of ore. In some places the ledge bulged out twenty feet wide.

The company has its own assaying outfit and the ore is carefully sampled and shows a profitable average for large tonnage. A new mill has been ordered from Denver and the process will be a tube mill and ten stamps with oil flotation.

The company is all financed and will be producing the first of May, it is expected.

RUSSIAN SUGAR BOWL IS EMPTY

(By Associated Press)

KIEV, Ukraine, Jan. 1.—The Ukraine has been long known as Russia's sugar bowl and flour bin but the sugar bowl has been empty for three or four years and now the flour and cornmeal are so low that it is doubtful whether the Ukrainians will have enough bread to carry themselves through to another harvest. The hungry folk from the Volga (amine) district have invaded the Ukraine by hundreds of thousands. Moscow and Petrograd have drawn on their bread supply to the limit of their power.

The Ukrainians are however a fighting, independent lot who have stubbornly resisted requisition and defeated plans to divert their food-stuffs in large quantities to other parts of Russia. These requisitions and general dissatisfaction with the conditions have played a large part in limiting the Ukrainian food supply. Besides the snows were so late in coming last fall that much of the grain seed was frozen in the ground before the snows came to give it protection. Consequently the Ukraine faces the possibility of a small grain yield next year. Even an extraordinary spring sowing cannot compensate for the favorable condition of the crops planted last fall.

The attitude of the Ukraine toward Moscow is of far greater importance than that of all the other so-called "federated" republics because of its great wealth and common boundaries with Poland and Romania. Moscow apparently regards the Ukrainian republic as a federated part of the government having its headquarters in Moscow. But Ukraine, probably under pressure of the intense Ukrainian nationalist sentiment, holds that it is quite independent of Moscow and aspires to support diplomatic negotiations with European powers to obtain recognition as an independent nation.

M. Rakovsky, the Russian Socialist, who is now president of the Ukrainian Socialist Soviet republic, has been able with Moscow's aid, to suppress all the larger movements against Russian domination of the Ukraine but, nevertheless, the idea of complete independence of Moscow seems to be uppermost in the minds of the little Russians, peasants, merchants, laborers and professional classes alike.

Communism exists in the Ukraine in a much diluted form. M. Zinovief, chairman of the executive committee of the Third Internationale, and other high priests of Marxism visit little Russia occasionally and try to whip it into line with the Third Internationale and the Moscow program. But the Ukrainians still aspire for independence.

APPEALS FOR POSTPONEMENT

(By Associated Press)

SOFIA, Jan. 27.—King Boris of Bulgaria appealed to the Allies to postpone the payment of some of Bulgaria's reparations in the Christmas message he sent to the United States through The Associated Press.

"Standing here in the midst of a people bowed in sorrow and suffering, in my country that is prostrate and dismembered," the King said, "I should like at this season of peace and good-will to mankind to appeal to the great nations of the earth to grant Bulgaria some reward and compensation for her exemplary conduct during the past three years and for her faithful discharge of treaty obligations."

"I know my people may look with hope and confidence to the ever-sympathetic and fair-minded American government to raise its voice in our behalf in European councils when the revision of existing treaties is considered. We are especially anxious that our situation should be taken up at the forthcoming European conference in which we hope the United States will participate."

"Unless Bulgaria is afforded some relief from her present intolerable burdens and unless the Allies see fit to postpone some of our reparations payments I am afraid the country may reach a state of economic, financial and moral exhaustion. Also, it is vital to our economic existence that we have free access to the sea."

King Boris added in a subsequent chat with the correspondent that he hoped his country had passed the crisis but he went on, "We are still in a period of convalescence. We are still struggling to catch our breath. It will be a long time before we are out of danger."

The king declared that Bulgaria would endeavor by the policy of peace, labor and forbearance, to merit continuance of the support and sympathy of the United States and to deserve the approval of the Allies.
