

SHOWING NEW LINENS
 JUST ARRIVED TODAY
ART LINENS
 IN ALL WIDTHS
TABLE LINENS
 WITH NAPKINS TO MATCH
 EMBROIDERY LINENS
 IN NATURAL COLORS
LINEN SUITINGS
 IN ALL COLORS

Hill's Dep't Store

A GUARANTEED
 2 quart
 Hot Water Bottle
 $1.75
 See Our Display Window

PUTMAN'S DRUG STORE
THE REXALL STORE

A CLASSIFIED AD WILL DO IT

Coarse Breads

- HEALTH BREAD contains all of the wheat, very nutritious, 9c each.
- GRAHAM BREAD, 9c each.
- WHOLE WHEAT BREAD, 9c each.
- OAT MEAL COOKIES, made from rolled oats, 20c dozen.
- BRUNSWICK COFFEE CAKE filled with home made raspberry jam and almond filling, 30c each.
- CREAM-PUFFS, 60c dozen.
- CHOCOLATE ECLAIRS, 60c dozen.

Macpherson's Bakery

We Invite You to Come in

AND SEE WHAT 15c WILL BUY AT OUR STORE WE HAVE

- | | |
|------------------------------|---------------------------|
| Coat Hangers 15c | Ladies' Hose 15c |
| Aluminum Pans 15c | Mens' Hose 15c |
| Alum. Pic Plates 15c | Childrens' Hose 15c |
| Small Dripping Pan 15c | Huck Towels 15c |
| Vaseline, 2 for 15c | Canvas Gloves 15c |
| Talc. Powder, 2 for 15c | Tooth Paste 15c |
| Pencil Tablets 4 for 15c | Tooth Brushes 15c |
| Ink Tablets, 4 for 15c | Hose Supporters 15c |
| Crochet Cotton 2 for 15c | Face Powder 15c |

DON'T FAIL TO SEE OUR NEW LINE OF GINGHAMS, VOILES, FOULARDS, DOTTED SWISS, FLAXONS AND ORGANDIES.

Andrew's Variety Store

GIRLS PLAY THIS EVENING

Championship of Eastern Oregon To Be Decided on Local Floor Tonight.

The big game of the season in the girls' basketball series will take place Friday evening in the high school gym, the undefeated La Grande and Pendleton high school sextettes playing each other in the critical game of the season.

Both Pendleton and La Grande have won their early games with large scores and the championship lies between the two teams. Therefore the winner of Friday's game will have a decided edge on the other team.

Miss Genevieve Jones, the La Grande coach, announces that her proteges are in good shape and are expecting to win.

The game will be called at eight o'clock in the high school gymnasium and promises to be well attended. A pep meeting was held in the high school yesterday afternoon to arouse the necessary spirit—and it was aroused.

ENTERPRISE TO PLAY SATURDAY

Undefeated Basketball Team Meets La Grande Team; Local Boys Expect To Win.

Last week La Grande High school succeeded in defeating the Haines High School basketball team who had not met defeat until then and this Saturday they expect to add a defeat to Enterprises string of games.

Enterprise has a clean slate so far this season and have defeated the local five at Enterprise by a considerable margin. However, things promise to be different this week as since the game with Enterprise the team has improved considerably and are working together better than at any time before during this season.

As Haines has been defeated Enterprise is the only team left without a loss in this section and unless La Grande ties the can on them they will probably be chosen to represent this section at the inter-school tournament to be held at Eugene under the auspices of Willamette University this spring.

Coach Lodell announces that he is confident his team will win on Saturday. The same line-up, Coker and Lynch, forwards; Metcalf, center; Bean and Garrity, guards will be used. Hough and Smith will be the first string subs.

A large turnout is expected at this game as it promises to be a closely fought and interesting game. Next week the locals will journey to Pendleton to play to games with the Round-up City High and will close the season on March 4 against Haines here.

Enterprise has a clean slate so far this season and have defeated the local five at Enterprise by a considerable margin. However, things promise to be different this week as since the game with Enterprise the team has improved considerably and are working together better than at any time before during this season.

As Haines has been defeated Enterprise is the only team left without a loss in this section and unless La Grande ties the can on them they will probably be chosen to represent this section at the inter-school tournament to be held at Eugene under the auspices of Willamette University this spring.

Coach Lodell announces that he is confident his team will win on Saturday. The same line-up, Coker and Lynch, forwards; Metcalf, center; Bean and Garrity, guards will be used. Hough and Smith will be the first string subs.

A large turnout is expected at this game as it promises to be a closely fought and interesting game. Next week the locals will journey to Pendleton to play to games with the Round-up City High and will close the season on March 4 against Haines here.

CANADA SECOND IN TELEPHONES

OTTAWA, Ont., Feb. 17.—Canada ranks second among the nations of the world to the United States in the number of telephones per hundred of population, according to the statistical bureau of the Canadian government.

The United States has 13.6 telephones per hundred of population and Canada has 9.8, according to these records.

In 1921 there were 856,266 telephones in use in Canada, an increase of 16 per cent over 1920. The wire mileage used was 2,105,101 and the average persons per mile were 42," says the Bureau report.

"Naturally the most telephones in the Dominion are in the large cities. Such cities as Montreal, Quebec, Toronto, Ottawa, Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton, Vancouver and Victoria have as good telephone service as any cities in the United States. But in the last two or three years there has been a very large increase in the number of telephones in the rural districts of the prairie provinces."

OUTLINES NEW ISLAND POLICY

(By Associated Press)
 MANILA, P. I., Feb. 17.—Governor General Wood has announced his intention to follow in the near future the policy outlined in the report of the Wood-Forbes mission, as the basis of administration of the Philippines government. The chief executive, through certain letters to all department secretaries, states that while certain excellent principles and points have been followed successfully in the past, there are at the same time evils that have grown up, which need to be remedied. In this connection, Governor Wood says he intends to prepare a government program that will make possible the realization, for the next four years at least, of the policy which the Wood-Forbes mission's report advocated, and the secretaries of departments and all their subordinates are urged to cooperate in making the necessary changes and adjustments.

Each secretary of department is instructed to submit to the governor general a program of activities of his department in line with the suggestions and recommendations contained in the report of the mission and to this end, the chief executive has issued to the secretaries memorandum prepared by members of the mission which suggests some of the subjects which should be considered and a definite method of dealing with the problem.

TEHRAN IS NEARLY TAKEN

(By Associated Press)
 MOSCOW, Feb. 17.—Ehsanulla, the chief of the red revolutionary movement of Persia, who last June made a daring raid that all but succeeded in capturing Teheran, has escaped the Shah's Cossacks and is now here.

"The people's struggle against the Shah and the feudal landlords has failed. There'll be no more," he said. His comrade leaders in the revolution were killed.

Ehsanulla is rated the most picturesque figure of all the bandit and revolutionary leaders of the Middle East.

Educated and daring, for 16 years he has fought the established order in Persia. His long hair and shaggy beard are known to thousands of Persian peasants.

He is known as the Karl Marx of Persia, but in many ways resembles Makno, the peasant leader of South Russia. He has never been captured, though he has taken part in every armed struggle of Persia since 1905. He might now be master of Teheran and of Persia but for quarrels between two of his associate leaders, Kutchik and Haider.

With a peasant army strengthened by Russian Communists, he struck from Busch to Teheran, while many of the Shah's 50,000 troops were putting down risings at Tabriz and at Horoshan, and was within 35 miles of Teheran when a betrayal in his own ranks gave news of his whereabouts and forced his retreat.

"After the Anglo-Russian treaty, by which both nations agreed to leave Persia alone," said Ehsanulla, "I realized that the Sayyid Zia-ul-Din government was a reversion to the old, corrupt law of the feudalists, each of whom is a sort of a little Shah, and that the rule of the combined peasantry and educated class would go under, perhaps forever, unless I made a last desperate effort.

"So I got together a few thousand peasant soldiery and by secret paths and rapid marching tried to reach Teheran. The Cossacks of the Shah began to attack me and the Russian Communists with me lost heart. I fought until I was surrounded and then retreated.

"An Englishman no longer dares to go into North Persia, but this is not much satisfaction for me since they will again control in Teheran. My pity is for the poor peasants. I built schools and hospitals for them.

"There need be no fear that Persia will join the Pan-Islamic union projected by Enver Pasha. The Islamic religion has ruined the Orient and we have no desire to form a union that would again place us in subjection to the Turks."

Ehsanulla is rated the most picturesque figure of all the bandit and revolutionary leaders of the Middle East.

Educated and daring, for 16 years he has fought the established order in Persia. His long hair and shaggy beard are known to thousands of Persian peasants.

He is known as the Karl Marx of Persia, but in many ways resembles Makno, the peasant leader of South Russia. He has never been captured, though he has taken part in every armed struggle of Persia since 1905. He might now be master of Teheran and of Persia but for quarrels between two of his associate leaders, Kutchik and Haider.

With a peasant army strengthened by Russian Communists, he struck from Busch to Teheran, while many of the Shah's 50,000 troops were putting down risings at Tabriz and at Horoshan, and was within 35 miles of Teheran when a betrayal in his own ranks gave news of his whereabouts and forced his retreat.

"After the Anglo-Russian treaty, by which both nations agreed to leave Persia alone," said Ehsanulla, "I realized that the Sayyid Zia-ul-Din government was a reversion to the old, corrupt law of the feudalists, each of whom is a sort of a little Shah, and that the rule of the combined peasantry and educated class would go under, perhaps forever, unless I made a last desperate effort.

"So I got together a few thousand peasant soldiery and by secret paths and rapid marching tried to reach Teheran. The Cossacks of the Shah began to attack me and the Russian Communists with me lost heart. I fought until I was surrounded and then retreated.

"An Englishman no longer dares to go into North Persia, but this is not much satisfaction for me since they will again control in Teheran. My pity is for the poor peasants. I built schools and hospitals for them.

"There need be no fear that Persia will join the Pan-Islamic union projected by Enver Pasha. The Islamic religion has ruined the Orient and we have no desire to form a union that would again place us in subjection to the Turks."

Ehsanulla is rated the most picturesque figure of all the bandit and revolutionary leaders of the Middle East.

Educated and daring, for 16 years he has fought the established order in Persia. His long hair and shaggy beard are known to thousands of Persian peasants.

He is known as the Karl Marx of Persia, but in many ways resembles Makno, the peasant leader of South Russia. He has never been captured, though he has taken part in every armed struggle of Persia since 1905. He might now be master of Teheran and of Persia but for quarrels between two of his associate leaders, Kutchik and Haider.

With a peasant army strengthened by Russian Communists, he struck from Busch to Teheran, while many of the Shah's 50,000 troops were putting down risings at Tabriz and at Horoshan, and was within 35 miles of Teheran when a betrayal in his own ranks gave news of his whereabouts and forced his retreat.

"After the Anglo-Russian treaty, by which both nations agreed to leave Persia alone," said Ehsanulla, "I realized that the Sayyid Zia-ul-Din government was a reversion to the old, corrupt law of the feudalists, each of whom is a sort of a little Shah, and that the rule of the combined peasantry and educated class would go under, perhaps forever, unless I made a last desperate effort.

"So I got together a few thousand peasant soldiery and by secret paths and rapid marching tried to reach Teheran. The Cossacks of the Shah began to attack me and the Russian Communists with me lost heart. I fought until I was surrounded and then retreated.

"An Englishman no longer dares to go into North Persia, but this is not much satisfaction for me since they will again control in Teheran. My pity is for the poor peasants. I built schools and hospitals for them.

"There need be no fear that Persia will join the Pan-Islamic union projected by Enver Pasha. The Islamic religion has ruined the Orient and we have no desire to form a union that would again place us in subjection to the Turks."

Ehsanulla is rated the most picturesque figure of all the bandit and revolutionary leaders of the Middle East.

Educated and daring, for 16 years he has fought the established order in Persia. His long hair and shaggy beard are known to thousands of Persian peasants.

He is known as the Karl Marx of Persia, but in many ways resembles Makno, the peasant leader of South Russia. He has never been captured, though he has taken part in every armed struggle of Persia since 1905. He might now be master of Teheran and of Persia but for quarrels between two of his associate leaders, Kutchik and Haider.

With a peasant army strengthened by Russian Communists, he struck from Busch to Teheran, while many of the Shah's 50,000 troops were putting down risings at Tabriz and at Horoshan, and was within 35 miles of Teheran when a betrayal in his own ranks gave news of his whereabouts and forced his retreat.

"After the Anglo-Russian treaty, by which both nations agreed to leave Persia alone," said Ehsanulla, "I realized that the Sayyid Zia-ul-Din government was a reversion to the old, corrupt law of the feudalists, each of whom is a sort of a little Shah, and that the rule of the combined peasantry and educated class would go under, perhaps forever, unless I made a last desperate effort.

"So I got together a few thousand peasant soldiery and by secret paths and rapid marching tried to reach Teheran. The Cossacks of the Shah began to attack me and the Russian Communists with me lost heart. I fought until I was surrounded and then retreated.

"An Englishman no longer dares to go into North Persia, but this is not much satisfaction for me since they will again control in Teheran. My pity is for the poor peasants. I built schools and hospitals for them.

"There need be no fear that Persia will join the Pan-Islamic union projected by Enver Pasha. The Islamic religion has ruined the Orient and we have no desire to form a union that would again place us in subjection to the Turks."

Ehsanulla is rated the most picturesque figure of all the bandit and revolutionary leaders of the Middle East.

Educated and daring, for 16 years he has fought the established order in Persia. His long hair and shaggy beard are known to thousands of Persian peasants.

He is known as the Karl Marx of Persia, but in many ways resembles Makno, the peasant leader of South Russia. He has never been captured, though he has taken part in every armed struggle of Persia since 1905. He might now be master of Teheran and of Persia but for quarrels between two of his associate leaders, Kutchik and Haider.

With a peasant army strengthened by Russian Communists, he struck from Busch to Teheran, while many of the Shah's 50,000 troops were putting down risings at Tabriz and at Horoshan, and was within 35 miles of Teheran when a betrayal in his own ranks gave news of his whereabouts and forced his retreat.

"After the Anglo-Russian treaty, by which both nations agreed to leave Persia alone," said Ehsanulla, "I realized that the Sayyid Zia-ul-Din government was a reversion to the old, corrupt law of the feudalists, each of whom is a sort of a little Shah, and that the rule of the combined peasantry and educated class would go under, perhaps forever, unless I made a last desperate effort.

"So I got together a few thousand peasant soldiery and by secret paths and rapid marching tried to reach Teheran. The Cossacks of the Shah began to attack me and the Russian Communists with me lost heart. I fought until I was surrounded and then retreated.

"An Englishman no longer dares to go into North Persia, but this is not much satisfaction for me since they will again control in Teheran. My pity is for the poor peasants. I built schools and hospitals for them.

"There need be no fear that Persia will join the Pan-Islamic union projected by Enver Pasha. The Islamic religion has ruined the Orient and we have no desire to form a union that would again place us in subjection to the Turks."

Ehsanulla is rated the most picturesque figure of all the bandit and revolutionary leaders of the Middle East.

Educated and daring, for 16 years he has fought the established order in Persia. His long hair and shaggy beard are known to thousands of Persian peasants.

He is known as the Karl Marx of Persia, but in many ways resembles Makno, the peasant leader of South Russia. He has never been captured, though he has taken part in every armed struggle of Persia since 1905. He might now be master of Teheran and of Persia but for quarrels between two of his associate leaders, Kutchik and Haider.

With a peasant army strengthened by Russian Communists, he struck from Busch to Teheran, while many of the Shah's 50,000 troops were putting down risings at Tabriz and at Horoshan, and was within 35 miles of Teheran when a betrayal in his own ranks gave news of his whereabouts and forced his retreat.

"After the Anglo-Russian treaty, by which both nations agreed to leave Persia alone," said Ehsanulla, "I realized that the Sayyid Zia-ul-Din government was a reversion to the old, corrupt law of the feudalists, each of whom is a sort of a little Shah, and that the rule of the combined peasantry and educated class would go under, perhaps forever, unless I made a last desperate effort.

"So I got together a few thousand peasant soldiery and by secret paths and rapid marching tried to reach Teheran. The Cossacks of the Shah began to attack me and the Russian Communists with me lost heart. I fought until I was surrounded and then retreated.

"An Englishman no longer dares to go into North Persia, but this is not much satisfaction for me since they will again control in Teheran. My pity is for the poor peasants. I built schools and hospitals for them.

"There need be no fear that Persia will join the Pan-Islamic union projected by Enver Pasha. The Islamic religion has ruined the Orient and we have no desire to form a union that would again place us in subjection to the Turks."

Ehsanulla is rated the most picturesque figure of all the bandit and revolutionary leaders of the Middle East.

Educated and daring, for 16 years he has fought the established order in Persia. His long hair and shaggy beard are known to thousands of Persian peasants.

He is known as the Karl Marx of Persia, but in many ways resembles Makno, the peasant leader of South Russia. He has never been captured, though he has taken part in every armed struggle of Persia since 1905. He might now be master of Teheran and of Persia but for quarrels between two of his associate leaders, Kutchik and Haider.

With a peasant army strengthened by Russian Communists, he struck from Busch to Teheran, while many of the Shah's 50,000 troops were putting down risings at Tabriz and at Horoshan, and was within 35 miles of Teheran when a betrayal in his own ranks gave news of his whereabouts and forced his retreat.

"After the Anglo-Russian treaty, by which both nations agreed to leave Persia alone," said Ehsanulla, "I realized that the Sayyid Zia-ul-Din government was a reversion to the old, corrupt law of the feudalists, each of whom is a sort of a little Shah, and that the rule of the combined peasantry and educated class would go under, perhaps forever, unless I made a last desperate effort.

"So I got together a few thousand peasant soldiery and by secret paths and rapid marching tried to reach Teheran. The Cossacks of the Shah began to attack me and the Russian Communists with me lost heart. I fought until I was surrounded and then retreated.

"An Englishman no longer dares to go into North Persia, but this is not much satisfaction for me since they will again control in Teheran. My pity is for the poor peasants. I built schools and hospitals for them.

"There need be no fear that Persia will join the Pan-Islamic union projected by Enver Pasha. The Islamic religion has ruined the Orient and we have no desire to form a union that would again place us in subjection to the Turks."

Ehsanulla is rated the most picturesque figure of all the bandit and revolutionary leaders of the Middle East.

Educated and daring, for 16 years he has fought the established order in Persia. His long hair and shaggy beard are known to thousands of Persian peasants.

He is known as the Karl Marx of Persia, but in many ways resembles Makno, the peasant leader of South Russia. He has never been captured, though he has taken part in every armed struggle of Persia since 1905. He might now be master of Teheran and of Persia but for quarrels between two of his associate leaders, Kutchik and Haider.

With a peasant army strengthened by Russian Communists, he struck from Busch to Teheran, while many of the Shah's 50,000 troops were putting down risings at Tabriz and at Horoshan, and was within 35 miles of Teheran when a betrayal in his own ranks gave news of his whereabouts and forced his retreat.

"After the Anglo-Russian treaty, by which both nations agreed to leave Persia alone," said Ehsanulla, "I realized that the Sayyid Zia-ul-Din government was a reversion to the old, corrupt law of the feudalists, each of whom is a sort of a little Shah, and that the rule of the combined peasantry and educated class would go under, perhaps forever, unless I made a last desperate effort.

"So I got together a few thousand peasant soldiery and by secret paths and rapid marching tried to reach Teheran. The Cossacks of the Shah began to attack me and the Russian Communists with me lost heart. I fought until I was surrounded and then retreated.

"An Englishman no longer dares to go into North Persia, but this is not much satisfaction for me since they will again control in Teheran. My pity is for the poor peasants. I built schools and hospitals for them.

"There need be no fear that Persia will join the Pan-Islamic union projected by Enver Pasha. The Islamic religion has ruined the Orient and we have no desire to form a union that would again place us in subjection to the Turks."

Ehsanulla is rated the most picturesque figure of all the bandit and revolutionary leaders of the Middle East.

Educated and daring, for 16 years he has fought the established order in Persia. His long hair and shaggy beard are known to thousands of Persian peasants.

He is known as the Karl Marx of Persia, but in many ways resembles Makno, the peasant leader of South Russia. He has never been captured, though he has taken part in every armed struggle of Persia since 1905. He might now be master of Teheran and of Persia but for quarrels between two of his associate leaders, Kutchik and Haider.

With a peasant army strengthened by Russian Communists, he struck from Busch to Teheran, while many of the Shah's 50,000 troops were putting down risings at Tabriz and at Horoshan, and was within 35 miles of Teheran when a betrayal in his own ranks gave news of his whereabouts and forced his retreat.

"After the Anglo-Russian treaty, by which both nations agreed to leave Persia alone," said Ehsanulla, "I realized that the Sayyid Zia-ul-Din government was a reversion to the old, corrupt law of the feudalists, each of whom is a sort of a little Shah, and that the rule of the combined peasantry and educated class would go under, perhaps forever, unless I made a last desperate effort.

"So I got together a few thousand peasant soldiery and by secret paths and rapid marching tried to reach Teheran. The Cossacks of the Shah began to attack me and the Russian Communists with me lost heart. I fought until I was surrounded and then retreated.

"An Englishman no longer dares to go into North Persia, but this is not much satisfaction for me since they will again control in Teheran. My pity is for the poor peasants. I built schools and hospitals for them.

"There need be no fear that Persia will join the Pan-Islamic union projected by Enver Pasha. The Islamic religion has ruined the Orient and we have no desire to form a union that would again place us in subjection to the Turks."

Ehsanulla is rated the most picturesque figure of all the bandit and revolutionary leaders of the Middle East.

Educated and daring, for 16 years he has fought the established order in Persia. His long hair and shaggy beard are known to thousands of Persian peasants.

He is known as the Karl Marx of Persia, but in many ways resembles Makno, the peasant leader of South Russia. He has never been captured, though he has taken part in every armed struggle of Persia since 1905. He might now be master of Teheran and of Persia but for quarrels between two of his associate leaders, Kutchik and Haider.

With a peasant army strengthened by Russian Communists, he struck from Busch to Teheran, while many of the Shah's 50,000 troops were putting down risings at Tabriz and at Horoshan, and was within 35 miles of Teheran when a betrayal in his own ranks gave news of his whereabouts and forced his retreat.

"After the Anglo-Russian treaty, by which both nations agreed to leave Persia alone," said Ehsanulla, "I realized that the Sayyid Zia-ul-Din government was a reversion to the old, corrupt law of the feudalists, each of whom is a sort of a little Shah, and that the rule of the combined peasantry and educated class would go under, perhaps forever, unless I made a last desperate effort.

"So I got together a few thousand peasant soldiery and by secret paths and rapid marching tried to reach Teheran. The Cossacks of the Shah began to attack me and the Russian Communists with me lost heart. I fought until I was surrounded and then retreated.

"An Englishman no longer dares to go into North Persia, but this is not much satisfaction for me since they will again control in Teheran. My pity is for the poor peasants. I built schools and hospitals for them.

"There need be no fear that Persia will join the Pan-Islamic union projected by Enver Pasha. The Islamic religion has ruined the Orient and we have no desire to form a union that would again place us in subjection to the Turks."

Ehsanulla is rated the most picturesque figure of all the bandit and revolutionary leaders of the Middle East.

Educated and daring, for 16 years he has fought the established order in Persia. His long hair and shaggy beard are known to thousands of Persian peasants.

He is known as the Karl Marx of Persia, but in many ways resembles Makno, the peasant leader of South Russia. He has never been captured, though he has taken part in every armed struggle of Persia since 1905. He might now be master of Teheran and of Persia but for quarrels between two of his associate leaders, Kutchik and Haider.

With a peasant army strengthened by Russian Communists, he struck from Busch to Teheran, while many of the Shah's 50,000 troops were putting down risings at Tabriz and at Horoshan, and was within 35 miles of Teheran when a betrayal in his own ranks gave news of his whereabouts and forced his retreat.

"After the Anglo-Russian treaty, by which both nations agreed to leave Persia alone," said Ehsanulla, "I realized that the Sayyid Zia-ul-Din government was a reversion to the old, corrupt law of the feudalists, each of whom is a sort of a little Shah, and that the rule of the combined peasantry and educated class would go under, perhaps forever, unless I made a last desperate effort.

"So I got together a few thousand peasant soldiery and by secret paths and rapid marching tried to reach Teheran. The Cossacks of the Shah began to attack me and the Russian Communists with me lost heart. I fought until I was surrounded and then retreated.

"An Englishman no longer dares to go into North Persia, but this is not much satisfaction for me since they will again control in Teheran. My pity is for the poor peasants. I built schools and hospitals for them.

"There need be no fear that Persia will join the Pan-Islamic union projected by Enver Pasha. The Islamic religion has ruined the Orient and we have no desire to form a union that would again place us in subjection to the Turks."

Ehsanulla is rated the most picturesque figure of all the bandit and revolutionary leaders of the Middle East.

Educated and daring, for 16 years he has fought the established order in Persia. His long hair and shaggy beard are known to thousands of Persian peasants.

He is known as the Karl Marx of Persia, but in many ways resembles Makno, the peasant leader of South Russia. He has never been captured, though he has taken part in every armed struggle of Persia since 1905. He might now be master of Teheran and of Persia but for quarrels between two of his associate leaders, Kutchik and Haider.

With a peasant army strengthened by Russian Communists, he struck from Busch to Teheran, while many of the Shah's 50,000 troops were putting down risings at Tabriz and at Horoshan, and was within 35 miles of Teheran when a betrayal in his own ranks gave news of his whereabouts and forced his retreat.

"After the Anglo-Russian treaty, by which both nations agreed to leave Persia alone," said Ehsanulla, "I realized that the Sayyid Zia-ul-Din government was a reversion to the old, corrupt law of the feudalists, each of whom is a sort of a little Shah, and that the rule of the combined peasantry and educated class would go under, perhaps forever, unless I made a last desperate effort.

"So I got together a few thousand peasant soldiery and by secret paths and rapid marching tried to reach Teheran. The Cossacks of the Shah began to attack me and the Russian Communists with me lost heart. I fought until I was surrounded and then retreated.

"An Englishman no longer dares to go into North Persia, but this is not much satisfaction for me since they will again control in Teheran. My pity is for the poor peasants. I built schools and hospitals for them.

"There need be no fear that Persia will join the Pan-Islamic union projected by Enver Pasha. The Islamic religion has ruined the Orient and we have no desire to form a union that would again place us in subjection to the Turks."

Ehsanulla is rated the most picturesque figure of all the bandit and revolutionary leaders of the Middle East.

Educated and daring, for 16 years he has fought the established order in Persia. His long hair and shaggy beard are known to thousands of Persian peasants.

He is known as the Karl Marx of Persia, but in many ways resembles Makno, the peasant leader of South Russia. He has never been captured, though he has taken part in every armed struggle of Persia since 1905. He might now be master of Teheran and of Persia but for quarrels between two of his associate leaders, Kutchik and Haider.

With a peasant army strengthened by Russian Communists, he struck from Busch to Teheran, while many of the Shah's 50,000 troops were putting down risings at Tabriz and at Horoshan, and was within 35 miles of Teheran when a betrayal in his own ranks gave news of his whereabouts and forced his retreat.

"After the Anglo-Russian treaty, by which both nations agreed to leave Persia alone," said Ehsanulla, "I realized that the Sayyid Zia-ul-Din government was a reversion to the old, corrupt law of the feudalists, each of whom is a sort of a little Shah, and that the rule of the combined peasantry and educated class would go under, perhaps forever, unless I made a last desperate effort.

"So I got together a few thousand peasant soldiery and by secret paths and rapid marching tried to reach Teheran. The Cossacks of the Shah began to attack me and the Russian Communists with me lost heart. I fought until I was surrounded and then retreated.

"An Englishman no longer dares to go into North Persia, but this is not much satisfaction for me since they will again control in Teheran. My pity is for the poor peasants. I built schools and hospitals for them.

"There need be no fear that Persia will join the Pan-Islamic union projected by Enver Pasha. The Islamic religion has ruined the Orient and we have no desire to form a union that would again place us in subjection to the Turks."

Ehsanulla is rated the most picturesque figure of all the bandit and revolutionary leaders of the Middle East.

Educated and daring, for 16 years he has fought the established order in Persia. His long hair and shaggy beard are known to thousands of Persian peasants.

He is known as the Karl Marx of Persia, but in many ways resembles Makno, the peasant leader of South Russia. He has never been captured, though he has taken part in every armed struggle of Persia since 1905. He might now be master of Teheran and of Persia but for quarrels between two of his associate leaders, Kutchik and Haider.

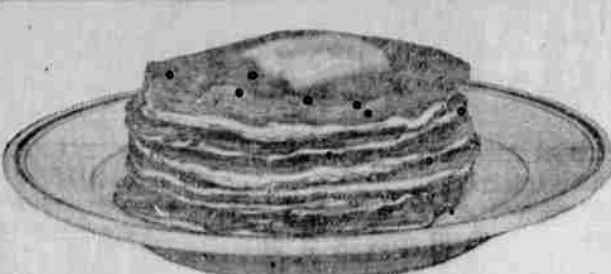

With a peasant army strengthened by Russian Communists, he struck from Busch to Teheran, while many of the Shah's 50,000 troops were putting down risings at Tabriz and at Horoshan, and was within 35 miles of Teheran when a betrayal in his own ranks gave news of his whereabouts and forced his retreat.

"After the Anglo-Russian treaty, by which both nations agreed to leave Persia alone," said Ehsanulla, "I realized that the Sayyid Zia-ul-Din government was a reversion to the old, corrupt law of the feudalists, each of whom is a sort of a little Shah, and that the rule of the combined peasantry and educated class would go under, perhaps forever, unless I made a last desperate effort.

"So I got together a few thousand peasant soldiery and by secret paths and rapid marching tried to reach Teheran. The Cossacks of the Shah began to attack me and the Russian Communists with me lost heart. I fought until I was surrounded and then retreated.

"An Englishman no longer dares to go into North Persia, but this is not much satisfaction for me since they will again control in Teheran. My pity is for the poor peasants. I built schools and hospitals for them.

"There need be no fear that Persia will join the Pan-Islamic union projected by Enver Pasha. The Islamic religion has ruined the Orient and we have no desire to form a union that would again place us in subjection to the Turks."

Quality—that's the Reason for the ever growing popularity of Albers Flapjack Flour. Makes light, tasty hot-cakes. Order a Package Your Grocer Recommends Albers quality

Albers Flapjack Flour

Carefully sealed cylindrical container insures absolute sanitation.

A CLASSIFIED AD WILL DO IT

See

"BULBUL"

The Amateur Comic Operetta at

High School Auditorium

—ON—

Next Monday and Tuesday Evenings

Benefit of Scholarship Loan Fund

Dramatics under Mrs. Norman Pees
 Music under Mrs. A. L. Richardson

THE assurance of a voice just when wanted gives such satisfaction. The operators are working day and night to keep each subscriber in touch with every other subscriber. If you are not already enjoying the advantages of a telephone, why not have one installed.

Home Independent Telephone Co.

"People Who Live in Glass Houses Should Dress in the Dark"

People Who Are Figuring on Building a House, Barn, Garage, or Woodshed Should Get Our Prices Now

BUILDERS HARDWARE

and

PAINTS

OREGON HARDWARE AND IMPLEMENT CO.

real Fern sale all next look at Cherry. This is your opportunity to get a beautiful Boston Fern at your own price. Monday, your choice, $3.00—reduced 50c a day until all are sold. Don't wait too long, however, as they will soon be sold. 2-16-29

See George Birnie in "BULBUL" make Otis Skinner look like a mere understudy. 2-16-29

THRIFT SHOP OPEN.
 The Red Cross Thrift Shop is open daily now in the New Foley Building, off the Chestnut street entrance. Thursday will continue to be Thrift Day and on this day all who have donations for the shop are asked to have it ready to be delivered, that being the day collections are made. 12-16-29

10 in. Double Disc Columbia Records

Are Now 75c

W. H. Bohnenkamp Company

For Sale

5-room modern bungalow, 3 lots, garage. This is a good buy for some service man that wants to use his State Loan. Price $3800.

New 4-room house, just completed. Here is a chance to buy a home that no one has ever lived in and the price is right. $150 cash will handle this. Price $1400.

3-room modern home, just off paved street. This is a good place and the location is good. Price $2600.

5-room modern bungalow, paved street, garage, full basement with wash trays.

4-room house furnished, big lot 60x110. The party that owns this place wants to move away and will sell now for $1700.