Inspected Art Goods—Harley Richardson, "The Art Man," spent Wednesday and Thursday of this week in Portland, where he and Mrs. Richardson had the privilege of seeing the complete line of the Tabor Franz Art company, which was shown in Portland for the first time since the war. This company is the largest publisher of sheet music and Artotype pictures in the world, having over seven thousand different subjects comprising reproductions of all of the old masters as well as nearly every modern artist, these in all sizes in both colors and monochrome. Mr. Richardson says that it was nearly as a trip east to the art galleries. While there he purchased quite an extensive line of both framed and unframed pictures of the most modern things in art, both large and small, and says that within the coming 60 days he will give the lovers of good pictures an eye full such as they have not yet seen in La Grande. Mrs. Richardson remained in Portland for the remainder of the week to look over other lines of art goods and visit with her parents. She will return home this coming Tuesday.

"The Thirty Tyrants"
 "The Thirty Tyrants" was the name given to an aristocratic body which usurped the government of Athens 404-403 B. C. The most notable was Critias. Their rule was overthrown by the democratic party under the lead of Thrasybulus. The same name is also applied to the body of pretenders to the Roman empire under the reigns of Valerian, Gallienus, etc. Outstanding among them were Tetricus and Odenathus.
