MAY—TOMORROW (1914)

"The Idle Class" is a thriller story of the long-horn cattle country of Texas—a land of romance and adventure, where vast herds of cattle roamed unhindered until the coming of the homesteaders and sheepmen, the latter being the deadly foe of the cattleman.

Law and order had to be maintained, and consequently, the sheriff had to appoint many deputies. He selected, with care men of nerve, and quick on draw. Among his selections was a two-fisted, two-gun cowboy named Ned Williams, played by Neal Hart.

Brand booters, cattle rustlers and drifters, kept Ned Williams pretty busy maintaining law and order in the county. Buck Kelly, owner of the meat market and dance hall, as well as the hall of chance, and who was a power in local politics, swung a wicked gun and did not hesitate to use it, depending on his pull to get away with anything; though he had wholesome respect for Ned Williams—more so than he did for the sheriff or any of his other deputies, for Ned was on the level and feared no man living, and lived up to the oath he took when his badge of office was handed to him: "It was not a job that bothered him much about losing."

Then follows a series of hair-raising incidents, packed with thrills and daring stunts, leading to victory for the young deputy sheriff.

Also showing Mut and Jeff.

SHERRYS, SUNDAY, MONDAY
Scenes on a river typifying the first stage of the journey westward the pioneers had to make in the days of gold, have been exceptionally well done in "White Oak," William S. Hart's latest Paramount picture, which comes to the Sherry theatre Sunday and Monday.

The quiet old steamer, resurrected from goodness knows where, was absolutely true to the period and the costumes were equally faithful to the times and types.

Exciting scenes include a dive into the river by several of the leading people including Mr. Hart who swam in icy water and rescued his sister from death. The story was written by Mr. Hart and directed by Lambert Hillier, with Bennett Mason as scenarist. The photography is the work of Joe August, A. S. C. and the production is a thrilling story of the days when the California pioneers crossed the deserts and mountains, braving untold dangers en route.

As Oak Miller, a gambler with a heart of gold, Mr. Hart is at his best and Viola Vale is a very demure and sweet leading woman.

Also showing a two-reel comedy.

CHAPLIN SEEN IN MANY GUILSES IN "IDLE CLASS"

"The Idle Class," Charles Chaplin's latest production for Associated First National release, is to be shown at the Star Theatre today and Sunday.

"The Idle Class" contains many features and sketches seen in Chaplin comedies. While Charles appears in many of the scenes clad in his regulation attire, later he dons the garments of a gentleman of leisure and doubles in a number of scenes.

But still later Charles can be seen in a suit of armor, while at a masquerade. He finds it rather cumbersome and disadvantageous, especially when the visor will not work at the moment that he is trying to imbibe a cocktail, but nevertheless later in the evening he is thankful to the fates that he is wearing the steel and iron, for the husband of the handsome young dame with whom he falls in love discovers that the armor is impervious to his fist.

There is a surprise finish to the comedy, also. And at the end Charles is beating it from thence in a remarkable hurry, with 400 pounds of enraged wrath galloping behind him.

Hot Gibson, the popular western star, will also be seen on the same program in his latest picture, "Sun Fire," a stirring picturization of Eugene Manlove Rhodes' western novel, "Bransford of Rainbow Ridge."

MISS DUPONT COMING IN "GOLDEN GALLOWES"

Miss Du Pont, leading woman of "English Wives" and a Universal star in her own right, may be seen at the Arcade Theatre Sunday only.

"The Golden Gallowes," the story of a woman who was unlucky enough to inherit a million.

It isn't generally considered a bad thing to be an heir to a fortune. But for a girl to inherit a vast sum of money from a man who is no relation of hers and supposedly means nothing in her young life is another matter entirely. The public likes to talk about it.

When Willow Winters heard that her clubman friend, Leander Sills had been killed by a former sweetheart, she was genuinely sorry, for he had been kind to her—after he had found out that he couldn't do anything else. And when she learned that he had left her a million or two, she was deeply surprised and grateful, though it was too late to express her gratitude.

But when the public learned of it, the dear, dear public found the whole thing a choice morsel of gossip. Since Willow was a chorus girl, suddenly elevated by a star's sickness to leading parts, the morsel had the appetizing flavor of full grown scandal.

Willow had intended to say yes to a question she expected from Peter Gallinger, handsome young member of an old Boston family. But Peter's aristocratic blue blood boiled at an ungentelemanly heat at the news of Willow's inheritance, and his first words to her were just as biting and bitter as might be expected. He "blew up" quite "unexpectedly."

A special two-reel comedy will also be shown.
