MARK TWAIN FILM POKES FUN AT ALL THE HISTORY BOOKS.

"Fun with a purpose" is what Mark Twain gave the world in "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," which, presented by William Fox as a special film production, is now playing at the Arcade Theatre. Mark Twain wrote this great comic romance first to make the world laugh and second to "show up" King Arthur.

Twain had not a very high opinion of the Knights of the Round Table. He had heard too much about them. Buskin and William Morris had been feeding the public on the Middle Ages, and it had become the fashion to believe that everybody dead and gone was better than everybody alive. Twain's "Yankee in the King" made Mark Twain sick. He was tired of the Middle Ages. Ladies languishing in high, inaccessible towers, waiting for knights to come and rescue them did not appeal to him at all. He had been brought up on the Mississippi, and he had the idea that the Mississippi riverman was as good as several of the Knights of the Round Table, and probably a lot better. Sir Galahad he considered a wishy-washy sort of hero; he preferred Tom Sawyer.

"I'll show you King Arthur and his well-known knights," said Mark Twain in effect. So he wrote, in his characteristic style, a modern, smart, clever young American at the court of King Arthur.

One of the first things this young American, Martin Caspary, discovered was that Arthur and the knights were victims of superstition. Then he discovered that the plumbing of King Arthur's Castle was very bad indeed. The wanted knights did not take a bath any too often, and the lines of the court were not particularly attractive.

Worst of all, the Knights of the Round Table were no great shakes when it came to fighting. Martin, armed with a .38 and .45, defeated the whole court, and then turned around and told the king that all this talk about ability was bunk.

Life in Lyonesse was uncomfortable for the Yankee until he had mounted all the knights on motorcycles, given them revolvers, and improved the royal telephone service.

and it is great fun for the motion picture public, judging from the success "A Connecticut Yankee" has had wherever it has been shown. "A Connecticut Yankee" will be the attraction at the Arcade Theatre until Saturday night.

starring May Allison; "There Are No Villains," with Viola Dana, and "Ladyfingers" the crook drama in which Mr. Lytell was last seen.

In "The Right That Failed" Mr. Lytell plays Johnny Duffey, a "high brow" prize fighter, who, ashamed of his profession, pays court to a prominent lawyer's daughter at an exclusive summer resort. Johnny had met the girl, Constance Talbot, when a policeman friend of his was about to arrest her for inserting a "Keep Off the Grass" sign in Central Park, New York. Johnny rescued her, and when she assigned that he was a member of her own caste, he did not want to disillusion her.

His own pugilistic aspirations are boomed and bumped at once when he knocks out Kid Reagan, the most prominent contender for the championship. But the knockout gives Johnny the use of his right hand. Acting upon the advice of his physician, he goes away for a long rest. It is during this rest that he wins the love of Constance. But, in keeping her love, his injured right hand is called into action. Knocking out a rival suitor, Johnny's right hand fails. His fighting days are over.

Also showing "Miracles of the Jungle" and "The Call of the Woods" at THE GARDENS TONIGHT.

Taylor Bros. Comedians will be seen tonight at The Gardens in "The Call of the Woods," a four act comedy drama with its locale that of the Canadian northwoods. It is a viable red-blooded story, in which all members of the cast have good parts.

"Toby" West has another good role and scores one of his finest comedy bits in the play.
