

OLDTIME PIRATES ARE OUTGLASSED

Modern Liquor-Pirates Put Captain Kidd, Morgan and Others to Shame With Their Piratical Escapades

(By Associated Press)

MIAMI, Fla., Aug. 10.—When Bob by his himself to the hayloft or crawls under the house and in wide-eyed wonder peruses a paper backed chronicle of Morgan, Captain Kidd, and other gentry who ransomed the seas under the Jolly Roger, he usually expressed regret that he did not live a century or two ago so he could have joined the adventures.

The boy may not know it, but the sea rovers are on the job again and the escapades of liquor pirates off the southeastern coast of Florida and in the Bahamas, if recorded in a book, might cause Bobby to regard Morgan, Kidd and Company with less awe. Morgan and Kidd were forced to depend upon sails for motive power, but the modern pirate has a gasoline motor and puts to sea in a boat that will move faster than any sailing vessel ever built.

He overhauls a liquor runner, holds it up, steals all or as much of its cargo as his vessel will carry, waves his hand to the luckless owner and disappears to hand his loot at some unfrequented cove on the Florida coast. Others have landed on small keys in the Bahamas where cargoes of liquor for rum runners have been appraised.
