TO PRESERVE TAILOR SHOP

Tennessee and City of Greenville Combine in Preserving Andrew Johnson's Tailor Shop for Future Generations.

(By Associated Press.)
GREENVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 21.—The state of Tennessee and the city of Greenville have taken steps to preserve for future generations the little building occupied by Andrew Johnson as a tailor shop, the place where he dreamed of one day occupying the highest position in the power of Americans to bestow upon one of their fellow citizens, the presidency.

The state legislature at its last session appropriated $15,000 to put a brick shell structure around the house, located in the center of this thriving little city built among the rolling hills of east Tennessee. An additional sum of $200 annually was provided for the upkeep of the building. A small home for the caretaker is included in the plans. Both structures are still under way.

Persons who visit the place will not be allowed to touch the tailor shop where "A Johnson tailored old clothes and new," for it will be partly encased in glass. Through the glass, however, the thousands of tourists who journey to Greenville every year may view the house and parts of its interior. They may see the work bench behind which the youthful workman plied his trade and he bemoaned the fate that deprived him of an education earlier in life, where he was inspired to achievement; where the dreams of an active career in public life took shape and spurred him on to enter politics at the age of twenty, a decision he evidently never regretted, according to his last statement, the original of which, along with other relics, will be made a part of the treasure that will be housed in the new building.

A touch of pathos and religion runs through the last recorded words of the only president to be impeached, the only tailor to become president, and the only president to be elected to the United States senate after serving in the nation's chief executive, a statement written as he saw the shadow of the Valley of Death gradually lengthening out to envelop him.

Hanging in a frame in his old home place here, it reads:
"All seems gloom and despair. I have performed my duty to my God, my country and my family. I have nothing to regret. Approaching death to me is the mere shadow of God's protecting wing. Reassure I almost feel sacred. Here I know no evil can come; there I will rest in quiet and peace, beyond the reach of calumny's poisoned shaft, the influence of envy and jealous enemies, where treason and traitors in state, back-biters and hypocrites, in church, can have no place, where the great fact will be realized that God is truth and gratitude is the highest tribute to man."

First Farm Book.
"A Book of Husbandry"—believed to be the first book on farming printed in England—was bought recently for a sum equal to about $1,500 on behalf of the British museum at Sotheby's salesrooms. This book, so small that it could easily be slipped in the pocket, was printed in 1523 by one Richard Penson. It was written by Sir Anthony Fitzherbert of Northbury, Derbyshire, and is in excellent condition, though colored with age. It is bound in morocco.

LONGER HOURS FOR OFFICIALS

(By Associated Press)
TOKIO, July 19.—(By Mail.—) Besides losing part of their summer holidays the civil officials of Japan are to work longer hours. Hereafter they had long holidays during the hot summer, which extends from July 10 to September 10, the officials taking it in turn to be away, while in winter they were only in their offices from 9 to 4. The revision just decided upon by the cabinet makes the working day all the year round 9 to 4 and allows only 23 days holiday in the year, which includes three days at New Year. As the officials had their salaries raised 70 per cent last year the local papers think they have nothing to complain of in being compelled to work longer hours.
