

NEAR EASTERN RELIEF WORK NOW STARTED

Oregon's Work in Near East Is Told by J. J. Handsaker, Oregon Director of Relief Work.

"In the city of Ervina, in Russian Armenia, east of the foot of Mount Ararat, where Noah's ark may have landed, I found a totally unexpected testimonial to Oregon's work in the Near East," states J. J. Handsaker, Oregon director of Near East Relief.

"One day as I was entering an orphanage I was addressed in perfect English by a very attractive young woman whom I learned was from Marsovan. I asked her at once if she had ever heard of Frances Gage of Portland who had died there while rescuing some 500 girls from lives of shame and suffering in Turkish harems and brothels.

"I was the leader of the group of girls whom Frances Gage died to save," she answered simply. "Except for her life and death I would now be held captive in some Turkish harem."

"During the recent flight of the Christians from Asia Minor thousands of such girls have disappeared. American relief workers have rescued many, but the fate of the thousands will never be known."

Reverend Robert Gray aided J. J. Handsaker of the Near East Relief at the morning hour at the Baptist church yesterday and the pledge cards returned amounted to $292.30 and more came in at the night service.

Mr. Gray preached in the evening on "The Distance Between Heaven and Hell," and services will be held every night this week.

COAST TO HAVE NEWS SERVICE

More Complete Market and Agricultural News is Seen for the Western States.

Senator McNary, chairman of the joint committee preparing the annual agricultural appropriation bill, today stated that the committee had adopted his amendment appropriating approximately $10,000 for the extension of the daily news service to the Pacific coast.

The market news service, the accurate and the collection and dissemination of news concerning prices, movements of products to the markets, and market conditions in general, the means of communication is maintained by a leased wire service. At the present time, this service is in use in the New England states, and most of the southern and middle states and has proved to be of incalculable value to the farmers living in the second areas of the country. At this time, the service does not extend beyond Omaha, Neb., and the appropriation in question will permit it to be extended through the Intermountain states to the Pacific coast from southern California to northern Washington. The two principal stations will be located at San Francisco and Portland.

There has been a strong and insistent demand for this service throughout the unpopulated portions of the country, and Senator McNary said he would try and hold the amendment in the senate and in conference.
