How To Lay Out A Garden In The City

A surprising amount and variety of vegetables can be grown in a city backyard garden provided it be well planned. The plan illustrated for a space of 10x20 feet is just a suggestion to build upon in making your own layout, if this is the space you have. If more space is available a much greater variety can be grown. Let us consider the possibilities of a space 30 by 50 feet, quite a common size.

For instance, planted the 50-foot way of the garden, put in the first row to early peas. A pint will plant the 50-foot row in a double row six inches apart; or, as some deem a better system, the peas spaced two or three inches apart in a wide row six inches across the bottom. The second row, two feet from the first, could be put in to second early peas, and a third row, two feet farther on, into a third pea planting. For this third row it might be well to allow two and a half or three feet space and plant some of the finer quality, heavier-vining peas.

The fourth row might be devoted to three plantings of radishes from a week to ten days apart, a third to each planting, the spaces to be filled in with a dozen peppers, six egg plants and, say, half a dozen late cabbage plants, after the radishes have been used. The fifth row, three feet from the pepper-egg plant row, would accommodate 30

Maine Cannot Grow Sugar Cane. Maine is the only state in the union where sugar cane cannot be raised. It grows there only a few feet high and the sap is not sweet. If all our cane sugar had to be raised in Maine it would cost about a thousand dollars a pound. Maine even, on the other hand, is the sweetest corn raised anywhere.

TO SMALL FIRES.

The fire department got plenty of action this morning at the termination of a long inactivity due to the fact that not a fire has been had in the past several days. Two alarms, one coming from Box 44 and one from Box 22, came in this morning, the first being received at 9:45 o'clock. A quick run brought the firemen to set it, where where the interior of a residence was on fire at one point where an over-heated fire had set fire to paper, covering the fire opening. The damage was small, amounting to about $50, the fire being put out by chemicals. The second call came at 11:30 and the fire department returned to the station. Before the alarm had finished ringing, a gasoline torch at Spatch's repair shop had been overturned and a blaze, that was quickly extinguished, resulted in no material damage.

tonight. Pendleton loses. The Pendleton team lost Thursday to Athena 26 to 23 and played Milton-Freewater last evening, no reports having been received as to the outcome of this game as yet. They have defeated Hood River and have lost to the Walla Walla and The Dalles teams but are considered one of the strongest teams in Eastern Oregon. With a record of nine wins and but one loss, the Blue bunch are expecting to take Pendleton's measure this evening.

The girls are facing a stronger team proportionally, if dope amounts to anything, than are the boys. The Pendleton sextette is hailed as some of the best in the state and with a nearly new team the La Grande girls will have a job on their hands to win from the Round-Up City girls.

Second Team Plays. The second team will meet Imbler this evening at Imbler in their last officially scheduled game of the season. So far the seconds have lost but one game, that to Union seconds, while on the other hand they have defeated Alicet twice, Union once and Imbler once, the latter game ending 49 to 7 in the Blue scrubs favor.

The First Shovelful

It has not been long as far as years go, since travel in the west was by means of stage coaches and the Northwest was still inaccessible.

Then one man began to vision how this section of our country could be developed and he planned a railroad as a great artery into what was then a wilderness.

His scheme was called a "wildcat," but he went ahead and he himself raised the first shovelful for the laying of the tracks. That man was James J. Hill.

Our small store in Wyoming 21 years ago was the "first shovelful" that has made for a nation-wide chain of stores serving the public in 29 states.
