"The only kind of a customer that is profitable is the man who comes again and brings his friends," we heard a merchant of 30 years' experience say.

There is much truth in the remark. The first sale should be the beginning of a friendship that results in more sales.

Therefore our policy of complete satisfaction to our customers. What we can do to help you will be done cheerfully.

SPOT IN SOUTH DAKOTA STILL IS UNEXPLORED

SCENIC, N. D., Feb. 12.—Half a dozen miles southwest of this town, in the very heart of the Badlands, Big Foot Wall stretches away to the southwest, and the northeast for miles. Between this wall and the pinnacles of White Water Wall and bounded on the west by Sage Creek Wall is an area of approximately four square miles. No white man's foot has ever rested there, so far as can be learned.

The Indians call the spot "michi makochi," meaning "Bad Place." A large scale map of Pennington county, drawn in 1908, describes the place as "Badland bluffs and canyons, impassable of access." Occasionally one of the Dakota (Sioux) Indians who will talk, tells strange tales about this particularly rugged portion of South Dakota. Deep canyons and gorges lead up to spiral-like pinnacles and every attempt to follow their tortuous paths thus far has ended in failure. Rattling and howling winds greet the explorer at every turn.

Chief Fleming Arrow, a veteran of the frontier wars, gives what probably is the Sioux name. Many years ago, the chief said, before the pale face came, there was the place where dwelt the Wankinyan (Thunder Bird) high in the pinnacles of stone. This wall of rock kept out unwelcome visitors, the chief continued and added that the protected area is rich in food, sunlight and warmth, and has quite cold streams of running water.
