HANDICAPPED PRODUCTION IS WORTH BILLIONS

Present Production Aggregated Total Average Value of $4,230,000,000 Last Year.

WASHINGTON, Mar. 17.—Prevented production aggregated a total average value of $4,230,000,000 last year in eleven of the country's important crops during the thirteen years, 1909 to 1921, the department of agriculture estimates. Weather, plant diseases, defective seed, and insect and animal pests account for this prevented production.

The corn crop is the chief sufferer, its annual average prevented production being 1,588,875,000 bushels, which at the average December 1 farm prices makes its value $1,256,282,000.

Next in order is the cotton crop whose prevented production averaged 5,415,000 bales, valued at $882,555,000 including seed.

Wheat follows with an annual damage of 448,762,000 bushels valued at $599,472,000.

The average prevented production and value of other crops are estimated as follows:

Oats, 596,492,000 bushels and value, $286,277,000; barley, 168,062,000 bushels valued at $81,318,000; flaxseed, 11,777,000 bushels valued at $25,494,000; rice, 11,267,000 bushels valued at $14,619,000; potatoes, 219,921,000 bushels valued at $291,849,000; apples, 183,456,000 bushels valued at $18,345,600; hogs, 34,025,000 tons valued at $27,620,000; and tobacco, 456,729,000 pounds valued at $30,774,000.

The absolute quantities of crop production prevented by the many and uncertain causes do not indicate the relative severity of the damage to the potential crop. From this point of view the one of these 11 crops that suffers the greatest relative damage is the apple crop, with a yearly damage that averages 47.4 per cent of a potential crop. That is to say, only about one-half of the potential crop of apples, on the average, is actually produced.

The potential flaxseed crop is damaged, on the average, to the extent of 44 per cent, or nearly as much as the apple crop, and the potential cotton crop 46.5 per cent although in 1921, the damage was as high as 57.4 per cent. In relative damage as well as actual the rice crop is at the bottom of the list with 25.8 per cent, or only one-quarter of the potential production.

Flaxseed leads all of these crops in future uncertainty of production, with a range between high and low damage to the potential crop as great as 51.5 per cent of that crop. Following in order of uncertainty come apples with a range of 35.7 per cent, cotton with a range of 30.5 per cent, barley with 30.1 per cent, hay with 22.8 per cent, oats with 21.1 per cent, corn with 21 per cent, potatoes with 19.2 per cent, wheat and rice each with 17.3 per cent, and tobacco far below with 9.8 per cent. As measures of the uncertainty of the future crop, a range of damage equalling 41.8 per cent of a potential production goes with the flaxseed crop at the highest extreme and 9.8 per cent with the tobacco crop at the lowest. These are ranges for United States averages. Ranges are greater in state averages and in individual farm experience.

"If farmers could harvest a potential production," says the department of agriculture, "they could greatly reduce the average now devoted to these 11 crops. The greater reduction would be one-half for flaxseed, apples and cotton taking the average of the last two years for cotton. The reduction would be one-third for corn, wheat, oats, barley, potatoes and tobacco, and for two crops—rice and hay—the reduction would be one-quarter."

"Had the potential production been realized on the actual average of crops, prices would have been smashed. However, it will not do to say that the farmer has lost an income equivalent to the value of the price of the harvest product. The fact is that the cost of the efforts to produce that portion of the potential crop which failed is a part of the cost of producing that portion of the crop which succeeded, and the economic necessity is that the farmer shall receive the equivalent of this abortive cost in the price of the crop actually produced."
